NO GAS SUPPLY ON SUNDAY

OWING TO MAKING CONNECTIONS WITH NEW PLANT.

Men Worked For Twenty-four Hours—The Additions Will Improve the Supply.

The Whig's typesetting machines are operated by gas and it was 11 a.m. Monday before they could be got running. The Whig had to some extent anticipated the cutting off of the gas, but its printers lost three hours and a half, and this resulted in a marked condensation of news in Monday's issue.

The work of making interchangeable pipe connections at the gas plant was completed at 4 a.m. on Monday morning. From 4 a.m. on Sunday morning fifteen men were working like beavers under the personal direction of Messrs. Moore & Roberts, expert plumbers, and the supervision of Manager C. C. Folger, and the task is now completed. The work was made necessary to carry out the plans that were adopted for improving the service by increasing the capacity of the plant and providing for what will be a practically uninterrupted service. Two new generators were recently installed that are capable of producing twice the amount of gas in a given time than the old ones could produce, but before putting into operation the new holder that was completed last year, new pipe connections had to be made. The pipe is twelve inches in diameter and the placing of these enormous "T's" and "Y's" with the necessary valves and reducers within the limited time of twenty-four hours was a prodigious task, and large excavations had to be made to accommodate the pipe.

The citizens who patiently waited through Sunday have no idea of how the men worked all day and prayed for the rain to hold off until they could complete the work. But it was accomplished according to schedule and a fine piece of workmanship it is, reflecting the greatest credit upon those engaged upon it. To the ordinary person unacquainted with machinery of this sort the collection of pipes looks like confusion, but it is all of vital importance to the gas service, which the Utilities Commission is endeavoring to extend throughout the city.

To obtain some idea of how the service has grown, it is only necessary to visit the plant and see the original gas holder that was erected within one of the buildings. Fifteen years ago it had to be replaced by a holder of double its capacity but it is still in use as an auxiliary. Applications have been pouring into the office of the commission for gas service, but it was impossible to fill them until a larger holder and new generators were installed. But even at the present time, with these improvements going into effect, the troubles of those in charge of gas production are not all cleared away by any means.

Gas is produced by two methods— from coal and from oil. Kingston obtains it from oil because at the time the system was adopted this was regarded as the most economical method, and at the present time, owing to the price of coal and the impossibility of obtaining coal reasonably free from sulphur, the oil system is the best for Kingston, while the oil supply holds out. There is one thing about producing gas from coal, however, that claims consideration and that is the by-product coke which almost pays for the original supply of coal used to produce it.

Theatrical

At the Strand.
 Probably no man knows the underworld of New York, nor can write more entertainingly of it, than Le Roy Scott. When he published "Mary Regan" it created a sensation, because of its vivid action and the story it unfolded. Even better than "Mary Regan" was his second book "A Daughter of Two Worlds." In this as in his previous work, the main characters were of the lowest strata of society. In neither book did he attempt any character delineation, but let the actions of those in his book build up and betray their characters as the story progressed. Action is the only thing which can be shown in pictures, and for that reason Mr. Scott's greatest novel has only been made more vivid by its transference to the screen under the same title as the novel. The production which will be shown at the Strand theatre, Monday, was made by Miss Norma Talmadge and her own company as the first picture for distribution by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. To say that Miss Talmadge has made a more striking character of Jennie Malone, than even the book, is saying nothing but what can be believed by those who are familiar with former pictures by this young star.—Advt.
