BISHOP BIDWELL OPPOSES PROHIBITION

(Continued From Page 1) or wine or spirits "drinks"—though his potatoes may be most moderate and infrequent and he may never have been the worse for liquor in his life. In the country, even those who keep it in the house seldom or never put it on the table.

Our Air is Wine. But the bishop is willing to give the other side. Says he—"It should be observed also that climatic conditions in eastern Canada at any rate do serve to lessen the need for stimulants. The exhilarating clear and invigorating air with the absence for the most part of fog and damp, together with glorious sunshine which prevails during the greater part of the year, undoubtedly render alcoholic beverages less necessary. Many Englishmen who come to live in Canada greatly reduce their use of stimulants, simply because they do not feel the need of it to the same extent. But, per contra, when the price of excessive drinking does get hold of a man, it seems to destroy him more quickly and completely than in England.

The testimony of Col. Grassett given below comports well with the sentiments in the above paragraphs. In reply to a question by the bishop, Toronto's former police chief wrote him: "The closing of the bar has been one of the very greatest benefits to the community, young and old, particularly the former, who in days to come will have good reason to bless their predecessors for suppressing the greatest curse in Canada. Having had the opportunity during thirty-eight years experience as chief constable, watching drunkenness and its effects in this city, I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion prohibition has been a success. I do not, however, support those who would go to extremes in this direction, but would favor some modification in existing regulations if such could be devised that would not impair the present Act, so far as drunkenness is concerned, but would give more liberty to the great bulk of law abiding citizens who for reasons of their own have in the public interest to endure the restrictions imposed by the Ontario Temperance Act for the benefit of those who cannot control their appetite for too much strong drink."

"Pro." Put One Over. Bishop Bidwell stigmatizes the methods resorted to by the prohibitionists as grossly unfair and declares that by means of the four different questions which had to be answered on the referendum ballot the issue was clouded, the vote split in favor of the "drys," with results entirely unrepresentative of public sentiment. Says he—"If the government had placed before the people the one question: 'Are you in favor of an amendment of the Ontario Temperance Act, substituting a system of strict government control of the liquor traffic for the practical prohibition now in force?' a clear issue would have been placed before the people and those who did not believe in it would have been left as they are now, with a rankling sense that they did not have quite a 'square deal.'"

Arab IV Went to Bottom. OPPOSE HIGHWAY POLICY

And Endorse Hydro Radial Policy—Meeting of the Frontenac U.F.O.

At a meeting of the United Farmers of Frontenac held in the agricultural hall on Saturday evening, the action of the Ontario Government in calling a halt to the hydro radial policy of Sir Adam Beck was endorsed, while strong opposition was taken to the present highway building programme owing to the enormous cost of the roads and the increased taxation that will have to be imposed upon the townships to meet their share of the expense.

Thomas Doyle, of Pittsburg, secretary and A. E. Weller, secretary, presented the report of the meeting of the highways he stated that a protest had been entered on behalf of municipalities charge with one-fifth of the cost of the roads now building. Under the system of financing the construction of the provincial roads the Dominion Government paid forty per cent, the province thirty-two per cent, and the municipality eighteen per cent. Of the road now building about eighteen miles run through Pittsburg township and seven or eight miles through the township of Kingston. A conservative estimate placed the cost at $40,000 a mile and declared it was manifestly unfair to load the burden of taxation necessary to meet the cost upon the townships through which the road ran. The entire county should be asked for by the townships and they have no control over their construction. It was pointed out by several speakers who have studied the road question and investigated the methods of construction that the work was not being restricted to the point of absolute necessity, while the costs were at the highest peak. They were heartily in accord with the policy of good roads, but the cost of maintaining the county and township roads was great and it was felt that greater economy should be employed in the methods of constructing the provincial roads.

Another point that raised strong objections was the employment of farmers' sons with their teams on this road building. The road work was at first intended to relieve the unemployment situation but the very class of labor intended to be benefited would not do the work, and farmers' sons abandoned the fields for the high wages offered. James Simpson, Cataract, spoke of the hydro radial question. This was a matter in which every farmer was deeply interested because the rural communities wanted light and power. When the hydro line was run through Cataract the people were given to understand that their needs would be met. When they applied for the service, however, there was none to be had. In his case he said that the line passed through his property. At the same time, Sir Adam Beck who was appointed hydro commissioner for the purpose of developing electric power was found to be engaged in bringing up and constructing radial lines paralleling the present steam roads and in competition with them, and the electric energy needed for light and power could not be obtained by the rural municipalities. The policy of buying the railways is against the interests of the farmers and the government has done well to look into Sir Adam Beck's scheme for if it were allowed to go ahead there would be no prospect of the farmers ever getting light and power.

John McGrath took strong objection to the municipalities financing radials to duplicate the present steam roads and also to the policy of widening the highways to eight feet by filling in ditches and cutting down great numbers of trees that could be put to use in a generation. James Bell, president of the Glenora U.F.O. club, concurred with the statements of the previous speakers and suggested that monthly meetings be held in order that the people might be educated on these important public questions. Sir Adam Beck was appointed to develop power not to build railways. He felt that these matters should be brought up in the individual clubs and discussed in order that action might be taken that would express the general feeling and wishes of the people. A vote on the radial question was deferred until October.

Major E. G. Barrett, sporting agent, presented his report upon the cattle and other stock sales which were regarded as most satisfactory. He directed attention to the failure of many farmers to make delivery when car lots were being made up. He was assured of the support of all the members present.

PEOPLE ARE GUILTY OF WORSE THAN TREASON

Who Would Try and Sow Discord Between Britain and U. S.

"These people who would try and sow discord between the two great English speaking nations of the earth are guilty of worse than treason," said Rev. W. Taylor Dale, during his sermon in Chalmers church on Sunday evening. He was preaching on Christian internationalism, based on Acts XVII, 25: "And God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

Mr. Dale has just returned from a visit to his old home in Ireland, and despite the horrors transpiring in the Old World, he returns full of hope and optimism. He preaches the doctrine that "God is in His heavens and all's well with the world." The great work involved in Christian internationalism he sees to be performed by Great Britain and the United States, and for those who sought to create ill-feeling between these two great nations, he had strong words of condemnation.

Trenton Enterprise. "It is rather pleasing to note," said Mr. Ryan, of the Mallinckrodt Chemical Company, Ltd., Montreal, in Druggist's Weekly, in commenting upon the new chemical company which is operating at Trenton, Ont., "that a Canadian company has been formed for the manufacture of aspirin on a large scale." According to information given out this company will manufacture 800 tons of aspirin annually for the markets here and abroad.

What a Fisherman Says. A Wolfe Islander says the governments of Canada and the United States should arrange a uniform rule for net fishing. The U. S. line runs near to Bear Point and U. S. fishermen scoop the fish of Lake Ontario into nets while Canadian fishermen are debarred from casting any nets. Nets should be prohibited or if not then nets should not be placed within a mile of the boundary line.

View of the Consul. Canadian shipbuilders are urging a direct subsidy for every ton of shipping built in the Dominion as a means of saving the industry from ruin, according to a report from Consul Felix Johnston at Kingston, received at the Department of Commerce, Washington.
