PLAIN AND PLAID
Interesting Wrap is Developed in Wool Serge.

Cape Cut in One Piece With Front Embellished With Lining of Green and Blue.

A wrap developed in plain and plaid wool serge is shown. Blue serge is the material used. A straight-hanging cape back has a lining of green and blue plaid and the plaid is repeated in the collar. The cape is cut in one piece with the front.

Other plaid wraps, writes a Paris fashion authority, are on the order of the traveling coats beloved by Englishwomen. An interesting one of plaid velours—navy blue, tan and green—is in regulation coat style drawn in slightly at the waistline with a black patent leather belt. There is a deep overcape that is attached to the neckline of the coat itself by means of buttons and buttonholes. This model, recently imported, is a favorite with Frenchwomen, who consider it very smart to carry the little cape on the arm. The lining is of brilliant green silk.

A navy blue duvetyne motor wrap has as its most unusual feature a collar of blue and white-checked angora that

Bobby Finds a New Friend.

"What in the world are those funny looking things floating in the water yonder, Squeedee?" asked Bobby, as he and Squeedee were romping on the seashore. "I've noticed several of them."

Squeedee ran down to the water's edge. Bobby at his heels, to get a better view; then he laughed merrily, whispered a magic word, and before Bobby could blink his eyes, he and the elfin were standing under a queer-looking umbrella-shaped thing.

"Jenny Jellyfish," said Squeedee, gently touching one of the long thread-like strings that hung down from the very centre of the round part. "I want you to meet my little friend, Bobby."

The umbrella-like shape spread out the tiny muscles that held it together, then drew them in again and laughed.

"Well, I just wondered if you were another boy coming down to drag me out on the shore," she laughed. "If you're a friend of Squeedee, you're a friend of mine, and I'll not sting you." And Jenny Jellyfish let one of her silken, hair-like arms touch Bobby's face.

"Well, of all things," exclaimed

Bobby in surprise. "So, you're a jellyfish! You know the other day when we were out here bathing, daddy told me not to get too near you or you'd sting me. I suppose those stingers help you to swim too, don't they?"

"Oh, no," laughed Jenny Jellyfish. "When I open and close my bell-shaped top that pushes me through the water just as your arms and hands push you through the water, and help you to swim. See this little veil-like thing under the centre of my bell? Well, this little veil or flap, we'll say, turns inward, and the muscles spread over to gather, in the act of swimming, push the water from the bell. My bell spreads and takes in more water, and the flat does its duty, and away I go through the water."

"How wonderful!" exclaimed Bobby. "I never could figure out just how jellyfish did get through the water before and I thank you for telling me."

"You see, I'm not like some of my cousins," laughed Jenny Jellyfish. Some of them have little oars, paddles or hair on the edge of their discs to help them in swimming. I expect I could tell you something else about Jennyfish, too. Did you know we can glow like your bugs that fly around at night?"

"Lighting bugs!" exclaimed Bobby. "You mean you can make a bright light like them?"

"That's what she means," replied Squeedee. "They glow just like fireflies, only their light looks like a ball of fire, sometimes red or blue, white or green or yellow."

"You'll find us glowing in all colors, and we come in all shapes," laughed Jenny Jellyfish. "Indeed, you're right when you say we're wonderful! From the size of a split pea to the size of a great big cartwheel—you'll find us."

"I bet those big fellows can sting all right," laughed Bobby.

"They wouldn't if folks didn't bother them," replied Jenny Jellyfish, sadly. "We never harm any one who never harms us. But so many folks like to throw us upon shore to see us—and we can't possibly live out of water, not any more than you could live under water if Squeedee wasn't here to cover you with his magic charm."

Bobby was sorry when he heard his mama calling him, and she and daddy had a good laugh when Bobby told them what the queer umbrella-shaped thing was floating out on the water,

RAFFIA BUCKLES ON HATS

Many Possibilities in Store for the Discarded Panama or Deserted Felt Hat.

Are you wondering what to do with that little old sport hat which gave you such good service last season? Perhaps it is a Panama or felt hat and still has many possibilities. Why not try dressing it up with a raffia buckle or two and see how really smart your old hat can look? suggests a fashion correspondent in the Milwaukee Sentinel.

Of course, you will make the buckles yourself. Since the raffia comes in various colors, original combinations may be made up to suit your different frocks.

The raffia is wound upon forms of papier-mache which may be purchased at any art and needlework store. The forms come in round, square, oval and hexagonal shapes.

The most effective buckles are made of two color raffia. The forms are wound round and round with raffia and then the edges are finished with a simple bit of stitching.

To do this bit of stitching, hold one strand of raffia in place along the outline of the buckle and, with another strand in your needle catch the outlining strand in as many places as you choose. In other words, it is merely couching.

Green outlined in brown, natural colored raffia outlined in dark brown, or orange, and tan outlined in rose, all make very effective color schemes for the buckles. It all depends on the color of your hat.

Cotton Blouses Good.

It is several years since so many cotton blouses have been offered. Sheer cotton dresses are very much in the limelight, and that blouses and separate skirts should follow suit seemed quite natural. Various novelty trimmings are featured on the organza blouses, and organza lead the procession in the sheer cotton class. Raffia embroidery is perhaps the most unique trimming touch.

Sardonyx the Latest.

The newest color for undergarments is sardonyx, which is a little deeper than ashes of roses, and a little lighter than the rust shade. Both colors are developed in handkerchief linen, with Irish lace buttons dyed to match the drapa web.
