

Why hens go on a strike!

The feed elements that make white eggs are entirely different from those that make yolks. When hens aren't fed both the white and yolk making elements, they can't lay.

Missouri Experiment Station test prove that 100 lbs. of wheat, corn, oats, barley and kafir corn make (above bodily maintenance) an average of 224 yolks to 154 whites. Based on data from the same experiments, Purina formulas produce, (above bodily maintenance), as follows:

Purina Scratch Feed	247.49 yolks	142.11 whites
Purina Chicken Chowder	182.05 yolks	282.55 whites
Combined Ration	429.54 yolks	424.66 whites

These Purina feeds not only make a practically equal number of whites and yolks but more of both than ordinary feeds.

Note that Purina Chicken Chowder contains the necessary white-forming elements to balance up the yolk-making grain ration. That's why it makes hens lay so heavily. Instead of the yolks being absorbed by the hen's system, Purina Chicken Chowder makes the whites to complete the eggs and they are laid. Thus we can absolutely guarantee more eggs or money back on Purina Chicken Chowder if fed with Purina Scratch Feed as directed. You take no risk.

ONTARIO WOMAN GAINS 32 POUNDS

Mrs. Brydges Only Tipped Beam at 98 Pounds When She Began Taking Tania.

"I only weighed ninety-eight pounds when I started on Tania, but I now weigh one hundred and thirty and am feeling like a different person," was the truly remarkable statement made recently by Mrs. Frieda Brydges, of 378 John street, north, Hamilton, Ont.

"I underwent an operation four years ago, and ever since then I have been in a very weak and run-down condition. My stomach was so upset that it would nauseate me even to drink a cup of milk, and I could hardly eat a morsel of solid food. I got so thin, people told me I looked like I was starving and I was so weak that if I attempted to push the carpet sweeper round the room I would have to lie down and rest afterwards. My nerves were so unstrung that the ringing of the door-bell made me tremble all over, and I could get but very little sleep at night.

"That was the state I was in when I got hold of Tania, but five bottles of that medicine have simply transformed me. Why, I have actually gained thirty-two pounds in weight, and am feeling simply fine. I have a splendid appetite, and can eat whatever I want and never suffer for a particle from indigestion. I sleep well at night, my nerves are steady, and I am so much stronger I can do my housework with ease. It is nothing less than marvelous how Tania has built me up, and I take great pleasure in making this statement for the benefit of others."

Tania is sold in Kingston by A. P. Chown, in Mountain Grove by James McDonald, and by the leading druggist in every town.

CALLED A CEMETERY FOR WAR PRISONERS

Many Thousands of Germans and Austrians Still in Siberia.

Berlin, Nov. 12.—Returning Austrian prisoners reaching Stockholm describe Siberia as a "cemetery for war prisoners," in interviews in Stockholm papers. Although the war ended two years ago, there are still many thousands of German and Austrian prisoners in Siberia.

Some of the returning prisoners describe the awful conditions of the Siberian prison camps, declaring that the men die not only from privation and epidemics, but as often from melancholia, and from the thought that they are forgotten and forsaken. Numerous camps are known as "death camps." The prisoners mentioned one camp where 2,500 out of 5,000 prisoners died in one year. In the so-called death camps, the prisoners died so fast last winter, that graves could not be dug fast enough in the deeply frozen ground. The corpses were stacked up like cordwood near the hospitals and were allowed to freeze together solidly and then buried at that spot when the thaw began.

Before the ground began to freeze this winter, great numbers of graves were dug at the camps to be in readiness for those thousands who will die before spring. These yawning graves, according to the returning men, have a most depressing effect on the prisoners at the camps.

Killed By Live Wire.

MAKING THE MOST OF IT.

"A humorist died the other day." "Did he leave an estate?" "Only one joke, which he bequeathed to his son."

"Not much of an inheritance." "But he, explained in his will, that if the joke were expanded into a musical comedy, made the theme of a Chautauque lecture and worked over from time to time and sold to the magazines, it would provide his heir with a comfortable income." — Birmingham Age-Herald.

Something Else Again.
"What's a beson?" asked the young woman who was getting her first glimpse of salt water.
"Why," replied the young man who was having the same experience, but wished to appear well versed in nautical matters, "it's one of those fustled things on ships to get fresh air through."

Victims Innumerable.
Foreign Visitor—What was the total loss of life caused by your revolutionary war?
Native American—Nobody knows. We kept adding to it every Fourth of July since, until recently. I reckon the grand total would make the latest war look like a mere skirmish.

Reconciling Them.
"Tommy," said Mr. Figg sternly, "I hung a net in your room to the effect that little boys should be seen and not heard."
"Yes, sir."
"What did you do with it?"
"I took it down to the deaf and dumb orphan asylum." — Pearson's.

TRYING IT ON THE BULLDOG
Her Husband: For heaven's sake! What have you been doing to the dog's face?
Mrs. Plainsmith: It's a new wrinkle eradicator. I thought I'd try it on Heeter and if it did him any good I'd use it myself.

My Luck.
If money grew on trees, I would not be well-to-do. For some would own a patch of woods, and a barren field.

Personal Preference.
"Have you given up the idea of subdividing the farm into town lots?"
"For the present," answered Farmer Coratossel. "My boy Josh and I couldn't quite agree. He didn't see the sense of providing sites for any public buildings except motion picture theaters."

An Annoyance.
"Here comes Green! Let's keep out of his way. I don't want to see him."
"What's the matter? I thought you were the best of friends?"
"We are. But his wife's away and mine isn't, and if he sees me he'll want me to go somewhere with him."

She Calls Me Mera.
"Mrs. Newcomb, you're an artist, aren't you?"
"Why, no, child. What makes you think that?"
"Why, last time you called, after you went, I heard mamma say: 'I'll bet that woman paints.'"

The Right Place.
"You have entirely too many dashes instead of proper punctuation marks in this sentence. Here you have it after this phrase: 'The man made a break from jail.'"
"But, teacher, that's just where the dash came."

The Combination.
"I knew a combination which you may always take it for granted is based on mischief."
"What combination is that?"
"A small boy and a pin."

HER MUSICAL CHOICE
"Go your daughter is musical!"
"Yes."
"Is she going in for classical works?"
"No, Janical."

Would Be Silent.
Some people deem it policy to think before they speak. If some other men did likewise they'd be silent for a week.

Force of Habit.
"Did you notice how slowly the detective who passed your house noticed the vine on the front?"
"I suppose he saw it was a porch-climber."

"A KIST OF WHISTLES."

James Watt Introduced Innovation Into His Church.

"James Watt was interested in many researches and inventions besides the one that brought him fame and fortune," says a writer in "Sunday's Magazine." "He received patents for a steam hammer, a screw propeller, a copying press, a machine for reproducing sculpture, and other more or improved mechanical contrivances; and, although the fact has been almost forgotten, he designed and built the first organ ever used in a Scottish Presbyterian church. It was originally a small chamber organ that he built for his own use when he was in instrument maker in Glasgow, but when he went to live in Birmingham, where he was a partner in Boulton's ironworks, he left the organ at Glasgow, and it came into the possession of the minister of St. Andrew's Church.

"For some time Watt's organ was used only for choir practice on week days, and was covered up and kept out of sight on the Sabbath. One Sunday in August, 1807, however, it was played during the service by an organist of the Episcopal faith. The Episcopalians at that time were known in Scotland as the whistling kirk, because they had adopted the organ—called by good Presbyterians a 'kist of whistles'—as a legitimate part of their church music. Presbyterian Glasgow was shocked by the innovation at St. Andrew's. The presbytery declared the use of the new instrument contrary to kirk law, and the organ was ignominiously cast out after a solitary service. It is said to be still in existence in the house of a Scottish squire near Biggar.

"Not until 1850 was the use of the organ tolerated in St. Andrew's, Glasgow."

King Edward's Memory.

In his volume of reminiscences entitled "Looking Back," Sir Seymour Fortescue gives more than one story to illustrate King Edward VII.'s unflinching courtesy and quick, retentive memory. Here is a typical instance: "Half an hour's conversation with a man," he writes, "is apt to give a greater insight into the character than years of correspondence, and this was especially the case with the Prince of Wales, who was endowed either by nature or training—or more probably by a mixture of both—with a memory that really was prodigious. As an example of this memory I recall on my first journey with him to Cannes, when he had got out at some wayside station to stroll about during the five minutes' wait, some very obvious English gentleman bowed and evidently rather expected to be recognized. His bow was, of course, returned, but on re-entering the railway carriage the prince at once asked me if I knew who the man was. I had never seen him in my life before, and so could be of no assistance.

"After the train had started again I could see that the prince was trying to place the individual, and suddenly, at the end of a quarter of an hour or so, he triumphantly exclaimed, 'I knew that I should get hold of it. He is a Mr. ———— and he was presented to me just fourteen years ago at a function at which I was present.' He then proceeded to state what the function was, and where it had taken place. He had never set eyes on the man in question since."

An Old Bible.

The Cottonian Library in England owns an old manuscript copy of a part of the Bible in Latin. This Bible, it is said, was used at the coronations of English sovereigns 300 years before the "stone of destiny" was brought from Scone to Westminster by Edward I. in 1296. If this be true, then the use of this Bible for the purpose dates back to the year 1000. It is a quarto of 217 leaves, containing the four gospels, and seems, from the style of the writing and the beautiful illuminations, to have been made about the end of the ninth century. This Bible narrowly escaped destruction in the fire at Ashburnham house in 1731, of which it bears evidence in its stained leaves and singed margins. There is some evidence that the son of Edward the Elder, Athelstan the Glorious, who was king of the West Saxons from 925 to 940, owned this Bible and gave it to the church of Dover.

Cambridge and Oxford.

"Whenever I go to Cambridge I am reminded of Edinburgh, not by the place but by the demeanor of the inhabitants," writes Mr. A. Clutton-Brow in "The Iris." "For, as every one you meet in the streets of Edinburgh seems to be aware that he is the citizen of no mean city, so all undergraduates and dons at Cambridge seem aware that they are members of no mean university. To go from Oxford to Cambridge is like going from England to Scotland, and Cambridge is like going from England to Scotland, and Cambridge has the same slight grudge against Oxford that Scotland has against England."

Appreciation.

A burly and bucolic person in a billy-cock hat was seen outside a second-hand bookseller's shop lost in the pages of Maeterlinck's "Life of the Bee." The traffic of the pavement surged about him, but still he read on, and when the watchful shop-keeper came to the door from time to time he found him reading yet. At last he closed the volume with an approving grunt, and, tapping its cover with a thick forefinger, addressed the broker: "I suppose, now you don't happen to have a book by this chap on cows?"

May Ban Pork Pies.

Rub Backache Away.

Back hurt you? Can't straighten up without feeling sudden pains, sharp aches and twinges? Now listen! That's lumbago, sciatica or maybe from a strain, and you'll get blessed relief the moment you rub your back with soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil." Nothing else takes away soreness, lameness and stiffness so quickly. You simply rub it on and out comes the pain. It is perfectly harmless and doesn't burn or discolor the skin.

Limber up! Don't suffer! Get a small trial bottle from any drug store and after using it just once, you'll forget that you ever had backache, lumbago, or sciatica, because your back will never hurt or cause any more misery. It never disappoints and has been recommended for 50 years.

Britain Has No Embargo Over Cattle Embargo

Ottawa, Nov. 12.—Advice from Great Britain give little hope that a sympathetic ear will be lent to Canadian representations concerning the injustice of the embargo against the landing of Canadian live cattle to fatten for slaughter in England. Even the protest of forty thousand British butchers has not helped materially, although it is freely acknowledged that there is not foot and mouth disease in Canada.
