Three Minute Journeys

Where a Store Has a Mystery of Entrance and Exit. (By Temple Manning.)

Can you imagine a large store—one perhaps not so large, but comparable with the best department store here—that is shrouded in mystery? The mystery is a simple, good-humored sort of mystery, but to those who don't set out with the definite intention of solving it right then and there it remains a mystery.

You enter this store and make your purchases on the first floor. Perhaps you wish to buy something which is on the next floor, or perhaps you are smilingly directed to an interesting way to leave the shop. Up a short flight of stairs you go, then you are directed to another flight of steps, and still another. You are always going up. Yet when you leave you find yourself departing through the door by which you entered, although you have climbed several flights of stairs.

A "Step Street" in Naples.

In the heart of Naples is the market-place. It is a section of the city which is hilly. When the old streets were originally laid out, no one thought of grading them. Indeed, in those days cities were not planned.

Like Tokyo they "just grew." So the streets of some parts of this section are built as illustration shows. To rise from a lower level to a street on a higher level, they are very broad "easy" steps. Between the lower street and the higher thoroughfare there may be a difference of perhaps twenty feet or more. This rise is not negotiated by a short flight of steep stairs, but—as our picture shows—by a long flight of very broad steps.

But one doesn't want to pass the lower end of the "step-street" when a heavy rain is falling and the water is tumbling down the cascade like rocks which form the steps. In pleasant weather, for most Neapolitan days are sunny, and the sky is a twin to the blue bay, the step-streets are of particular interest to the tourist. From them intimate glimpses of the lives of the people of Naples may be had. These range from views of the family washing hung across the street to frank views of the interiors of some of the homes which border on these streets of easy steps.

"WITS" OF HISTORY

By Mark Stuyvesant.

The Clever Way Daniel O'Connell Won a Will Case.

One of the stories that Daniel O'Connell, the Irish patriot, delighted to tell grew out of his law practice, in which he was very successful when a young man.

When he began the practice of law, O'Connell happened to be the lawyer for a cow-stealer, who was convicted of the crime. He was sentenced to transportation for 14 years. At the end of his sentence the cow-stealer returned to his old home and happened to meet O'Connell. They began to talk about the trial. O'Connell asked how it was that he happened always to steal fat cows, never thin ones.

"Your Share of It!"

"Well, then, I'll tell your honor the whole secret of it, sir. Whenever your honor goes to steal a cow always go on the worst night you can, for if the weather is very bad the chances are that nobody will be up to see your honor. The way you'll always know the fat cattle in the dark is by this token—that the fat cows always stand out in the more exposed places, but the lean ones always go into a ditch for shelter."

"So," O'Connell used to end with a laugh, "I got that lesson in cow-stealing gratis from my client."

One case in which O'Connell was interested depended for its success upon proving that one witness was not sober on the occasion, but was drunk. During his examination of this witness O'Connell discovered the man's character. He was a man who was described as "half foolish with roguery."

"Well, Darby," O'Connell asked, you told the truth to this gentleman?"

"Yes, your honor, Counsellor O'Connell."

"How do you know my name?"

"Ah, sure, every one knows our own patriot."

"Well, you are a good-humored, honest fellow. Now, Darby, tell me, did you take a drop of anything that day?"

"Why, your honor, I took my share of a pint of spirits."

"Your share of it! Now, by virtue of your oath, was not your share of it all but the pewter?"

"Why, then, dear knows, that's true for you, sir!"

The court was convulsed with laughter by both question and answer. Step by step O'Connell brought out the truth that the man was drunk that day and, therefore, was not a competent witness. Thus O'Connell won his case for his client.

A somewhat similar instance of O'Connell's keenness was demonstrated in a case in which the question was whether a will had been signed by a conscious testator, or whether, as was suspected, the pen had been put into the dead man's hand to trace the signature. O'Connell observed that the principal witness, under the severe and repeated cross-examination, always returned the same phrase:

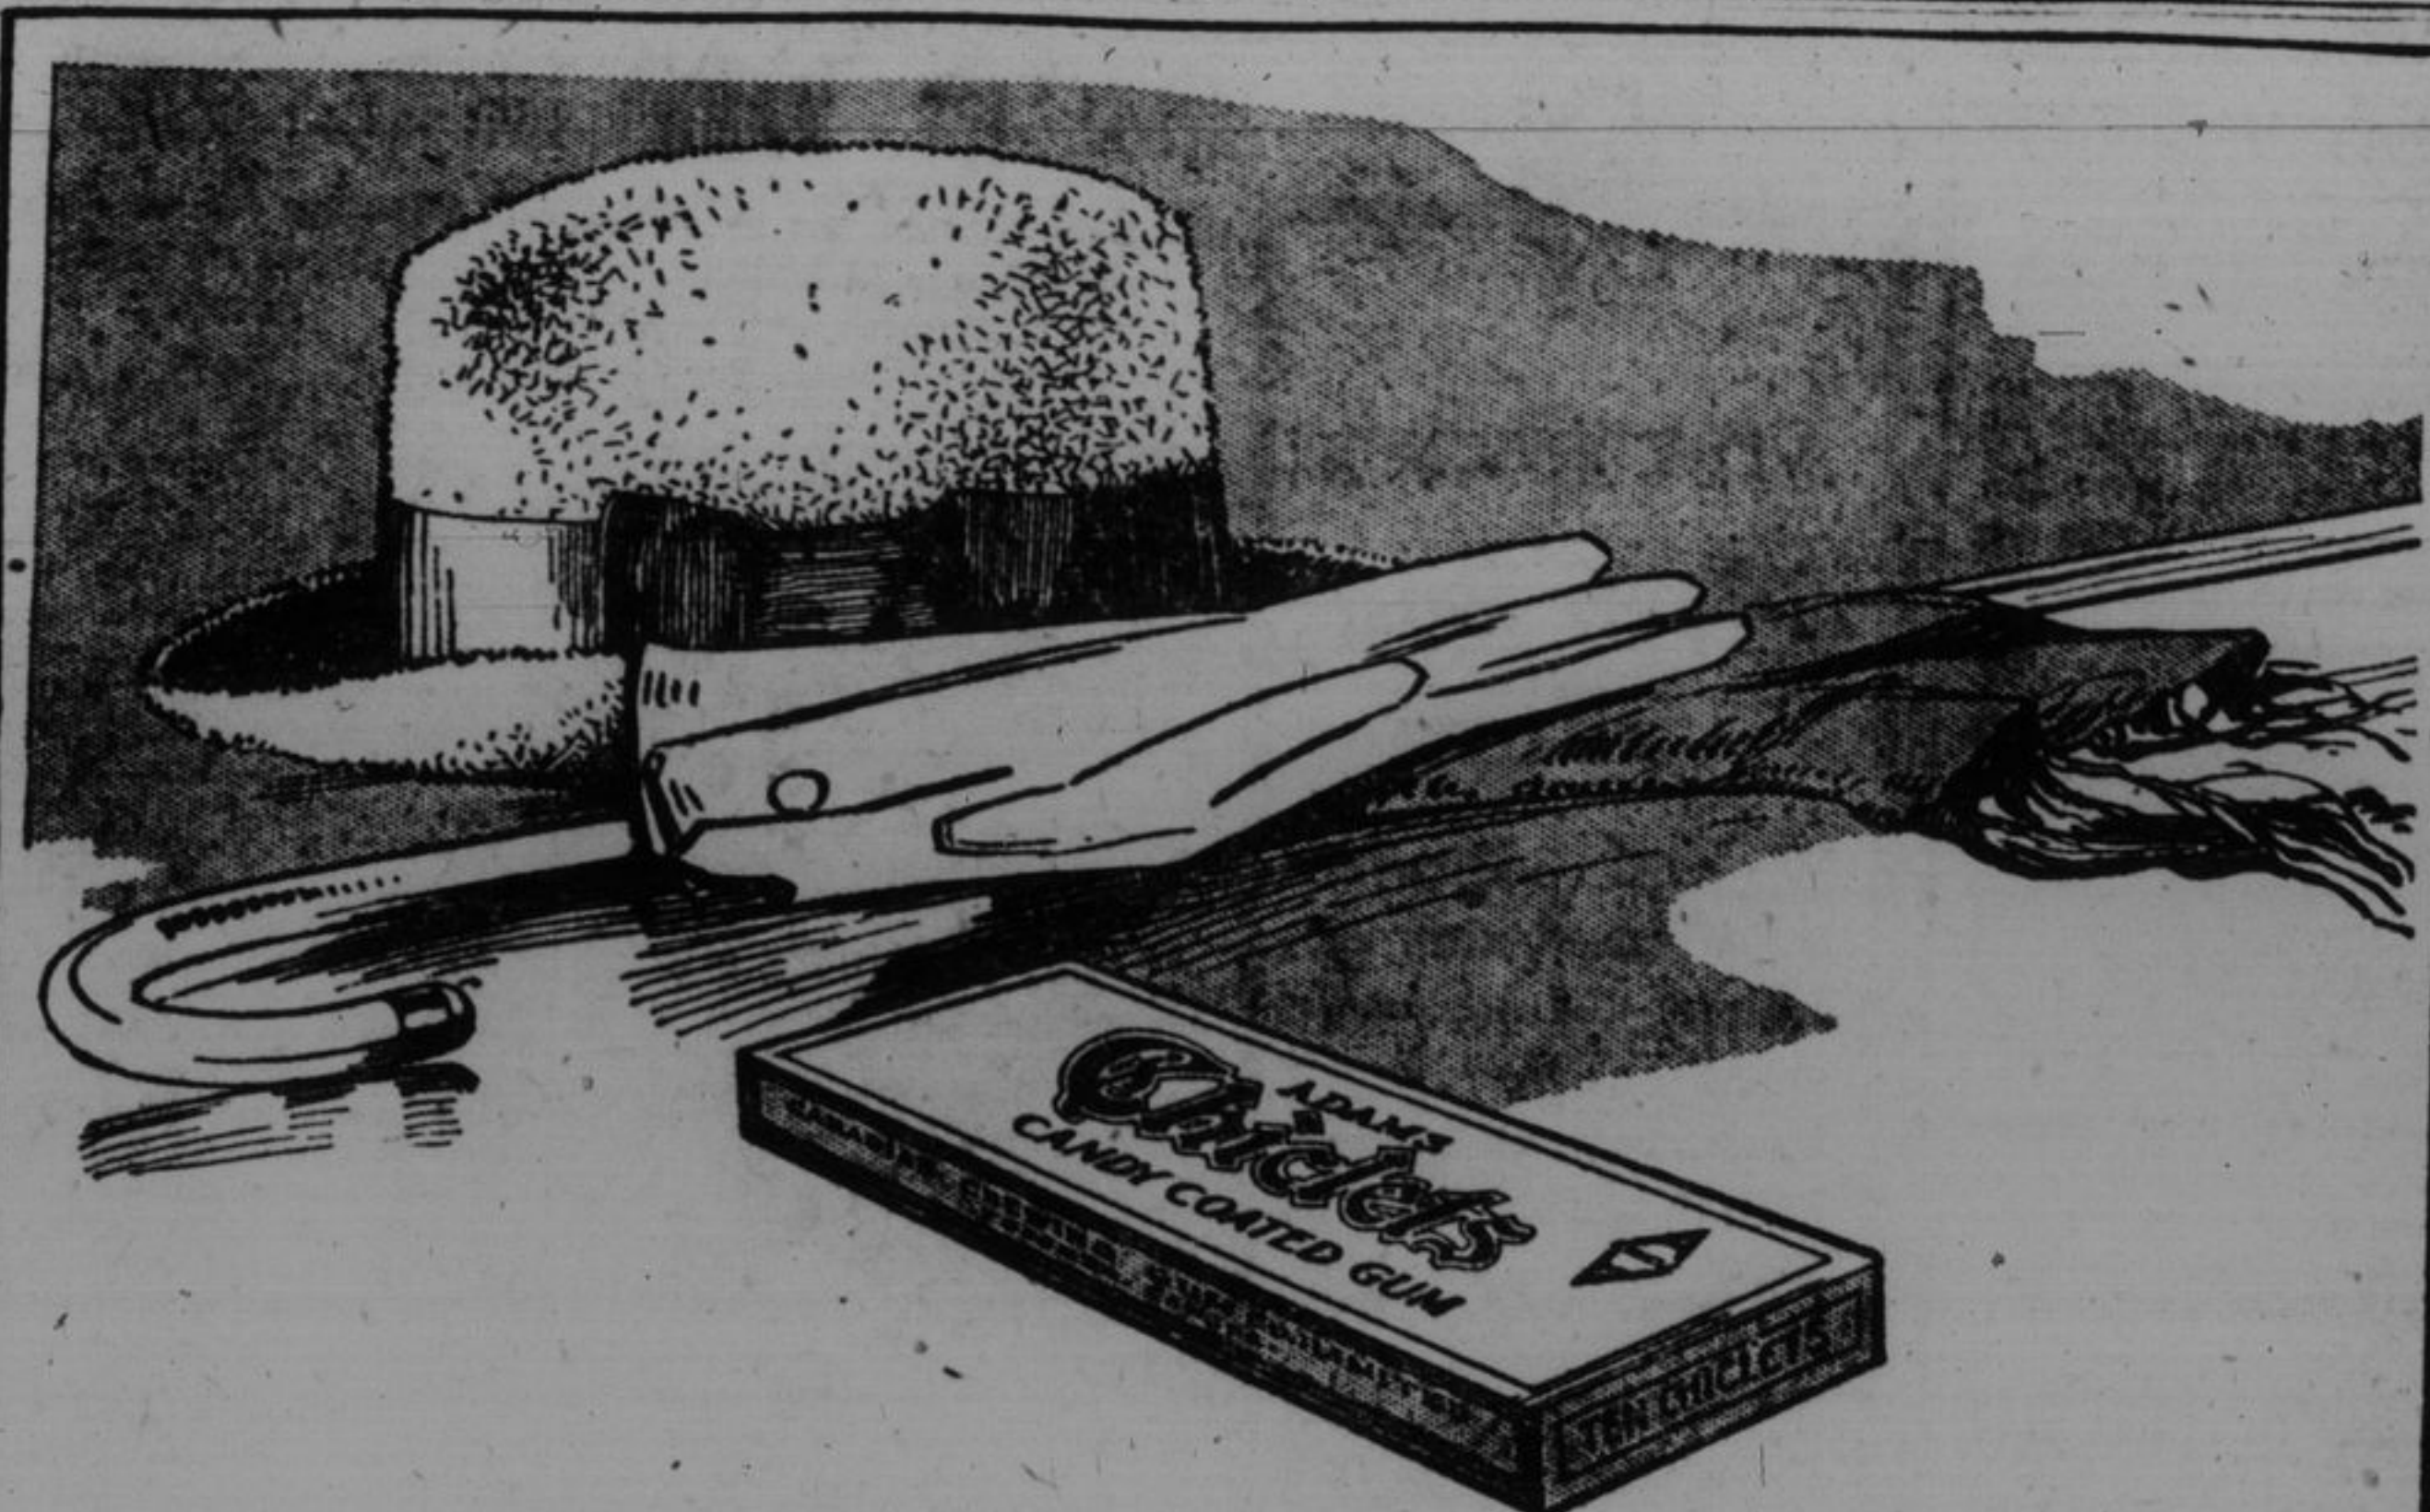

"There was life in him."

"By virtue of your oath," O'Connell demanded, "did you not put a fly in the dead man's mouth in order that you might swear there was life in him?"

O'Connell had guessed right. Pale with terror, the witness confessed his crime, and O'Connell won his case.

An Event at Denbigh. Denbigh, Feb. 10.—On Wednesday evening, February 2nd, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Ready, an enjoyable time was spent in the form of a variety shower, given in honor of their eldest son, Norris Michael, and bride, formerly Miss Emma C. Thompson, who were recently married in Kingston. The guests numbered about eighty-five and the large display of beautiful gifts testified to the popularity of the young couple, both of whom are widely known in these parts.
