AFTER A FIXED EASTER

The Church Is the Real Strong Opponent to the Proposed Plan.

London, March 28.—The occurence this year of Easter Sunday on March 27th, within five days of its earliest possible date, has revived the proposal for a fixed Easter. No fewer than sixteen Easters will happen in March between now and the close of this century—an average of one every five years—unless something is done to prevent the erratic wandering of the festival between March 22nd and April 25th.

Under the existing ecclesiastical rule Easter Sunday can fall on any of thirty-five dates, and it is a natural assumption that each of these dates recurs once in thirty-five years, or, roughly, three times in a century. But actually that is not so, owing to the essential conditions that Easter must be a Sunday, and that the ecclesiastical full moon (which is not the same as the real moon) upon which it depends must occur on one of the seven days immediately preceding it. Thus, to have Easter Sunday on its earliest date, March 22nd, the ecclesiastical moon must be full on March 21st, which date must also be a Saturday; but so rarely are these conditions satisfied in the same year that it is over a century since Easter fell on March 22nd, and it will not again fall so early until the year 2285.

Of late years the inconvenience of a moveable Easter has induced calendar reformers to propose reforms which will either make Easter a fixed festival or greatly restrict its wanderings. Professor Forster suggested that Easter Sunday should be assigned to the third Sunday after the spring equinox, which would give it a range of eight days, between April 5th and April 12th, according to the date and day of the week on which the equinox falls.

Other proposals aim at an Easter absolutely fixed to one date. That, of course would necessitate a radical reform of the whole calendar, under which the same weekday should always fall on the same date. A bill to reform the calendar on these lines was introduced into the House of Commons a few years ago, and in this April 14th which would have always been a Sunday, was scheduled as Easter Day. But the bill never got beyond a first reading.

Members of parliament, business people, lawyers, and schoolboys would all welcome such a change, but the church is strongly opposed to it, and the tradition of the church concerning a movable Easter will not easily be overcome. Any such reform will also have to be universal throughout Christendom, for the moon-controlled Easter is common to all civilized countries; though, owing to the fact that the Greek church still uses the Julian calendar, there are nearly always two Easter days every year, one the Gregorian, observed by Roman Catholics and Protestants, and the other the Julian, kept by those countries which are in communion with the Greek church.
