Diary of a Fashion Model

By GRACE THORNCLEIFFE

She Discusses the Vogue of the Tweed Suit.

Yesterday my friend, Rhoda Tremayne, arrived on one of the largest liners. I was at the pier to meet her. I had not seen her for three years, for she's been visiting her relatives in England.

"How splendid you look!" was my greeting as she stepped off the gang-plank.

"I'm so glad to see you!" she exclaimed. "It's so good to set foot on American soil once again."

"You must have had a wonderful time," I commented.

"Oh, indeed I have, but I'm going to work here for one year at least," she said.

"Work?" I questioned incredulously.

"Why, yes," answered my friend, who in former days, had been a student at art school.

"What are you going to do?" I thought since you had inherited money you would lead a life of ease and luxury," Rhoda exultingly replied.

"I'm going to design some posters for one of the biggest advertisers in the country, and lots of other things," Rhoda exultingly replied.

"Then I'll see you quite frequently," said I.

"Of course," she answered. "We'll have lots of fun together. Are you still at Madame's?"

"Yes, and still as interested in style as ever."

"Then perhaps you'd like to linger here a little while and see some of the passengers. I noticed a number of them wearing swaggar clothes as

CORNS

Lift Off with Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Truly!

Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.

They came on dock this morning," she commented.

"I don't think I shall, for you're wearing the most stunning suit I've seen for many a day," I answered.

"Do you like this?" questioned Rhoda in a most unconcerned tone of voice.

"I certainly do," was my answer.

"I'm glad you think it's presentable. I've been wearing it for months," said Rhoda. "It must look shabby."

"It looks like new, and the color's wonderful," I remarked.

"I must say I'm rather partial to Lovat green," conceded Rhoda.

"Is Lovat a new name for the color?" I asked.

"No, it's almost as old as the hills. Its greenish-gray tones are very becoming to most persons," observed Rhoda.

"Tweeds are very fashionable here, although you do not see so many of these lovely colors as doubtless you did in London," was my next remark.

"I saw some beautiful suits over there. A great many of them were made from finely woven tweeds. The homespun and those of rougher texture seem to be preferred for country wear," said Rhoda.

"The tailored suit is returning to its own rapidly. And, really, for day-time wear, when shopping or engaged in business, I think there is nothing more attractive," was my comment.

"This suit is rather interesting, because of the tucked sides which flare away from the figure," Rhoda remarked.

"Yes, I noticed that. I also like the manner in which the collar is notched," was my reply.

"Oh, that detail! I'd forgotten about it," admitted Rhoda.

"These are the very things which appeal to me, for often I can turn them to good account when I help Madame design," I murmured.

"Then you'll observe that the pocket flaps are narrow at the top and wider below," said Rhoda.

"Yes, I'm just making a note of it on my sketch, for I've been copying your suit," I remarked.

"That's all right, but don't forget the tuck on the side of the skirt and the turn-over cuff," Rhoda retorted.

"I've noted them all, and also the fact that your black ostrich on the top of the brim, and with green ostrich under the brim," I replied, as I tucked my sketch-book into my pocket.

THE FOREIGN MISSION WORK

Of the Canadian Presbyterian Church is Very Extensive.

Toronto, June 4.—The Presbyterian Church has, from its inception, been a missionary church, not only in the matter of home missions but equally so in the realm of foreign missions. The denomination has an honorable record in this regard, and many a foreign mission field was opened by Presbyterian pioneers within the century.

This fact was emphasized on foreign mission night in the General Assembly, now in session in Toronto; and indeed it is one of the great nights of the gathering, when the eyes of the six hundred commissioners are turned from the map of Canada to the map of the world. As a thousand home mission fields in the dominion represent the interests of this denomination in the homeland, so a review of its work in other parts of the empire and the Orient demonstrates their belief in the great commission—"Go ye into all the world and make disciples of every nation."

The Canadian Presbyterian Church has over 325 missionaries at work in nearly a score of centres in different parts of the world, viz:—at three points in China—Honan, Shanghai and South China; in Korea and Formosa; in Trinidad and British Guiana; and in Central India and Gwalior. A small annual grant is also given to the mission work in the New Hebrides, which has a sacred interest to Presbyterians through its Canadian martyr missionaries who founded it.

The foreign mission fields above mentioned are also manned by a native staff of 1,242. More and more it is the policy of the home churches to develop and train native workers.

The old conception of the foreign missionary as one who devoted himself exclusively to preaching to the illiterate and naked heathen under a palm tree is less true today than ever in the past. The Presbyterian foreign mission report, above referred to, calls for missionary recruits along evangelistic, educational, medical, dental, industrial, agricultural, literary, business and building lines—a wide range of activities, all will admit, and calling for expert qualifications. Twenty-eight volunteers for this department of the Presbyterian programme were received during 1920 and yet even this number fell short of the minimum requirements. Thirty-seven men are needed urgently and immediately this year to fill vacant positions such as ministers, teachers, doctors, dentists, business treasurers and commercial teachers.

The Presbyterian church is increasingly liberal in its gifts to foreign missions, the annual amount being largely increased through the Forward Movement thank-offering fund. The receipts for this service totalled $718,451 in 1920, viz: $645,530 direct gifts and $172,922 from the Women's Missionary Society. In addition, the native contributions amounted to a goodly sum.

METHODISTS OPEN FOR CHURCH UNION

Action Desired and Should Not Be Long Delayed, Says Dr. Chown.

Hamilton, June 4.—In interpreting the mind of Methodism on church union at the session of the Hamilton Methodist conference, Dr. S. D. Chown, general superintendent, made it clear that organic union was strongly desired and expressed the hope that the matter would not be delayed for any great length of time.

After dealing with the history of the union movement in the Methodist general conference and the Presbyterian general assembly, Dr. Chown said:

"If church union does not take place, an immense loss in membership and finance will be yielded up by the Methodist church in agreeing to formation of local union churches in different parts of Canada, and this, notwithstanding that she has always been true to the principle of union and to all agreements leading up to its consummation."

If church union were not consummated, Dr. Chown wanted to know who would straighten out the numerous property tangles. The Methodist church had made these sacrifices willingly in the interest of church union, in which she believes. She never would have made these sacrifices in the interest of disunion, or as contributing to the establishment of another denomination in Canada.

As regards the question of church union being postponed, Dr. Chown said the people of the Methodist church were prepared to be reasonably patient; but they were not prepared to accept a definite postponement without its being agreed to by mutual consent of all interested. They hoped further delay would not be desired.
