STORY OF POLICE COURT

Five Offenders Appear in the Blue Monday Morning Session.

The name "James H. Jackman" appeared on the big book on Magistrate Farrell's desk on Monday morning and after the name appeared the charge "vagrancy," but James very stoutly denied the charge.

"I'm no vagrant," said the accused, who told the magistrate that he had walked from Toronto to Kingston to secure employment.

"Is this not a free country?" went on the accused, in the tone of a lawyer making a plea for his client.

Jackman was without money when he struck Kingston, and he picked out a soft spot in the old mattress works to rest his weary bones at night time. Complaints were made to the police about a man sleeping in the building, and so Constables Fitzgerald and Campbell made a visit to the place and caught Jackman in the act of taking free lodging.

The magistrate told Jackman that this was a free country he was living in, but this did not allow him the right to be sleeping in a place like this. He added that the accused might have set fire to the building.

But there was more to Jackman's story. Sunday afternoon the police received complaints about him loitering around the city, staying on front lawns and telling yarns about being a millionaire. At one time he had quite an audience of children around him, listening to his tales. Some older folk who were attracted by his chatter, thought he had escaped from Rockwood Hospital.

Jackman said he was a meat chopper by trade, and that he had an appointment with a local butcher about a position. The police will see it to that he meets the said man about the said job, and if he does not get the job, he will be put on a train and sent back to Toronto.

"When your tank is empty get a White Horse." Thus reads a famous advertisement. Thomas Murtagh went over to Watertown, N.Y., on Sunday. He was very thirsty when he reached Watertown, and he asked the first man he met for a tip as to where he could get a "crook." He hit the right man for he had a "white horse" on his hip, and he sold it to the thirsty Kingstonian for $9. My! but the "bootleggers" in Watertown are getting good prices for the "precious stuff." However, as it was Sunday, probably the rates were given a boost. The tippler was fined $20 and costs. Pretty expensive outing.

In spite of all the dry laws there appears to be quite a lot of whiskey going the rounds, as there were some other tipplers on the carpet.

Elswood Bishop was accused of being intoxicated but stated that he had been indulging in beer and extract of lemon. However, the cost was just the same as if he had been drinking the real stuff. The magistrate said it with a fine of $10 and costs.

Maxam Shappee started out in an auto with a couple of strangers to go to a cheese factory. The car ran shy of gasoline. He provided the gasoline and in return got a couple of "shots" out of a bottle. Accused was remanded a couple of days.

How did a bottle of whiskey get into Percy Robinson's pocket? This is the question. Percy admitted being intoxicated, but blamed it all on extract of lemon, but he was given quite a shock when the magistrate informed him that he had a bottle with a small quantity of liquor in it, when he was corralled by the police. He was remanded a day, in order to give him time to solve the bottle mystery.

IN HEALTHY CONDITION.

No Reason at Present Time to Look for Lower Levels.

A. J. Pattison Jr. & Co., Toronto, in their comment on the unlisted market, say that last week's decline in the listed stocks had but little effect on the unlisted. Demand for investment issues kept steadily at a fair volume. Almost without exception stocks which are not listed are bought outright and with the idea of holding either for investment or for a long pull. Consequently the daily or even monthly fluctuations do not produce a change of sentiment and the inevitable result—forced selling. While during the past week a few declines were recorded, this was the case only in the more active stocks and no movement that could be called spectacular occurred with the exception of Imperial Oil and Goodyear Tire preferred. Imperial Oil was dealt into quite a large extent on the down turn. At one time the quotation was as low as $9 to $2, though a quick recovery took place from these figures to $1 to $6. Steady buying was noted all the way down. Goodyear Tire preferred sold off during the week from 45 to 50 to offered at 46 with no bid obtainable. This slump was not unexpected in view of the steady selling which has been going on for weeks. The support which was under the market for Goodyear now appears to be withdrawn so the stock should reach its proper level shortly. Riordan New Common improved slightly, being at one time 2 1/2 bid with none offered, the quote at the close was 2 to 3. Home Bank was steady but quiet. It is anticipated that the next annual statement will show that the bank has had a healthy growth and that their affairs are in a highly satisfactory condition. Cocksbutt Plow Preferred continues in demand with little stock floating. Canada Machinery Common sold during the week at 10 and was offered on the close at 12. Taken as a whole the unlisted market is in a healthy condition and there is no reason at the present time to look for lower levels.

Three years have passed since that sad day God called the one we loved away. He was the best that God could lend. A loving father, a faithful friend.

Sleep on, dear father, and take thy rest. We miss him most who loved him best. In silence he suffered, in patience he bore. Till God called him home to suffer no more. Life was desired, but God did see. Eternal rest was best for thee. —Loving wife and family.
