FROM HOBO TO CHAMPION

Dempsey Started as Farm Hand and Afterwards Adopted Tramping.

Jack Dempsey has had a varied career in and out of the ring in his twenty-six years. As has been true of most ring champions, the world's heavyweight title holder has advanced from obscurity to international fame in remarkably short time. Dempsey rose from the career of a nondescript to the world's heavyweight title and its accompanying distinction and riches in the space of four years of actual fighting. He really advanced to the ring's greatest honor in the short space of two years, for all his serious ring engagements occurred between 1917 and Independence Day of 1919, when, at the age of twenty-four, he battered Jess Willard helpless in their memorable battle at Toledo.

Dempsey embodies the qualities of three fighting nationalities. He claims the strain of Irish, Scotch and Indian qualities of these three races have been generously bred in his bone and blood, contributing to the remarkable piece of fighting machinery he now typifies. He has led a rugged life in the open for the most part, a condition which has assisted materially in molding his remarkable physique.

The champion's real name is William Harrison Dempsey. He was born June 24th, 1895, at Manassa, Col. He is the sixth child in a family of eight. Three of his brothers and three sisters are alive. The youngest child of the family, who was named Bruce, died about two years ago. When Dempsey was but seven years old his parents, Hiram and Celia Dempsey, moved with their children from Manassa to Montrose, Col. Here the family lived for nine years, and then travelled to Salt Lake City, Utah, which the champion and the rest of the household claim as their home town.

After Old Fighter.
 The prefix "Jack" was assumed by the champion when he attained his majority and turned to the ring for a livelihood. He adopted the name of the famous "Nonpareil," Jack Dempsey, of Brooklyn, on the theory that by assuming the former middleweight champion's name some of the glamor and distinction of the famous old fighter would revert to him.

Most of his early life Dempsey spent in the open, working as a farmhand. This resulted in the foundation of the wonderful physique which the champion now possesses. Dempsey tired of farm life, and turned to the mines, where hard labor strengthened the muscles which were later to bring him fame and glory. As he grew, Dempsey began to appreciate his wonderful build and, looking for an outlet for some of his accumulated strength, turned to the ring. Imbued with a desire to see the country, Dempsey

Killed by Blood Poison.
 Used an old razor for paring his corns. Foolish because 25c. buys a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, which for fifty years has been removing corns and warts without pain. No failure if you use "Putnam's." Refuse a substitute. 25c. everywhere.

began the life of a rover when he was twenty years old, going from town-to-town without enjoying the comforts of a day coach and never even thinking of a Pullman, selecting the bumpers or the rattling freight of necessity.

Dempsey developed naturally as a fighter. Unlike Carpentier, his rival, the champion had no early training in the rudiments of the sport. He had the necessary rugged build and the eagerness and ambition. In his occasional bouts Dempsey engaged in his own story Jack's first encounter was in an improvised ring at Montrose, Col., when he was about nineteen years old. His opponent was a young blacksmith named Woods, who lasted three rounds. For his efforts Jack received $25. He next knocked out Andy Malloy in three rounds, and polished off several minor rivals before finally hitting the trail for the east. He appeared in bouts in the east against Andre Anderson, Wild Burt Kenny and John Lester Johnson in 1916, but his efforts failed to win him serious consideration.

His Climb to Fame.
 In the following year, however, Dempsey began the climb which ended with his possession of the title. He knocked out Al Norton and Charley Miller, each in one round, and added victories over Willie Meahan, Carl Morris, Bob McAllister and Gunboat Smith in four-round bouts in California. He suffered a one-round knockout by Jim Flynn, Pueblo fireman, but subsequently reversed this setback. In 1918 Dempsey cleared the path to Willard when he knocked out Fred Fulton, Battling Levinsky, Porky Flynn, Arthur Pelky and Perry Kellar among others. These triumphs led up to the meeting with Willard, which still is fresh in memory.

Dempsey is retiring, modest and unassuming. Dempsey's failure to answer the call of the great war brought lasting condemnation on the champion. He was tried on a charge of dodging the draft and was exonerated, but the acquittal was a strictly legal and not a moral vindication. His conspicuous prominence before the public eye and the example, or lack of it, which he set, rebounded to the discredit of the world's champion. This has been manifested recently at the camp of his rival, where messages of encouragement and support from wounded soldiers and war veterans keep pouring in, some being carried personally to the challenger for the title.

Cobb Badly Injured.
 Injuries received by Ty Cobb, manager of the Detroit Tigers, in sliding into a base in a game with Cleveland probably will keep the star outfielder out of the game for at least three weeks, physicians announce. In doing a hook slide, Cobb spiked himself in the knee. Five stitches were necessary.

Epidemic of Dysentery
 It affects many people more in winter than in summer—in the one case it is due to improper eating—in the other, to congestion excited by cold. A small dose of good, old Nerviline repeated a couple of times usually removes the trouble very promptly. If there is pain, relief is almost immediate. For cramps, colic, stomach pains, and the like, Nerviline in sweetened water is certainly a wonder. 35c. at all dealers.
