FASHION GOWNS TIGHTLY DRAWN AROUND FIGURE

Daring Dress Seen at Paris Races—Slenderest Possible Models.

Paris, July 6.—The "melted down," the "slim silhouette" and the "straight line" after a furious onslaught on "Poirot's" crinolines, remain the absolute victors in the field of fashion.

Fashionable women this summer and fall will wear the slenderest possible models, tightly drawn around the figure and offset with either black lace or Indian shawls.

Diamonds as dress ornaments remain the mode, while the Marchioness Polignac, nee Crosby, inaugurated a new mode by wearing a necklace of pearls around her hat in the afternoon and on her hair in the evening instead of around the neck.

These fashions were issued by the Paris society "40" following the sadening experience of the Countess de Monbrison and others on arriving at the exclusive Moller circus last evening. The circus was held for the first time since 1912.

The countess and other notables arrived attired in wide crinolines only to discover that the crush was such at the entrance that it was impossible for them to enter. The result was that several of the nobility sent their maids home for slim gowns and changed in the dressing rooms before they could enter.

The Moller circus was another triumph for the "diana type," the duchesses and countesses displaying their brawny muscle as they performed equestrian feats in the ring to the accompaniment of the titled ringmaster's whip.

While women in short, sleeveless, gowns attained dress freedom, the men by contrast appeared wasp-waisted, wearing steel corsets and fancy stripes down the trousers which, like the sleeves, were tight. The collars worn by the men were the tallest on record.
