REARS TWENTY-FIVE ON LABORER'S WAGE

Progeny of St. Louis Man Range in Ages From Forty Down to Seven Years.

Parents, who find the rearing of even an average family a problem these days, behold Frederick Walkenhorst, St. Louis, who is the father of twenty-five children, and tells how he has managed to bring them up on a laborer's daily wage.

The house in which he lives is one index to his methods. It is a cottage of perhaps five rooms. Back of the house is a barn and in the barnyard a cow and a flock of chickens.

There is a best room furnished neatly but scantily, the superfluities consisting mostly of homemade handicraft, shelf covers and their tidies of white linen crochet. The visitor is permitted to tarry here for a moment, but almost immediately is invited into the kitchen beyond, where three daughters busily scrubbing floors or preparing the midday meal cannot spare time to sit idle as they talk. Indeed, one told that father will be in presently for his dinner, but he won't have time to talk, either, for several jobs of plowing are waiting for him in the afternoon.

Daughter Runs House.
Hilda, the eldest daughter at home, apparently has been in authority since the death of the second Mrs. Walkenhorst, five years ago. The first wife, the mother of 14 children, died when her last child was five days old. The second wife, a widow with one child, whom the stepfather also reared, became the mother of 11 Walkenhorsts.

There are now 12 children at home, besides a small son of Hilda's. There are not enough chairs anywhere visible to seat all the family at table at once. But chairs are to be classified as luxuries that may be dispensed with, one observes later when six bright, rosy cheeked, blonde youngsters come trooping in from school and take places, standing, all attention, with spoons poised ready to begin on the soup almost before Hilda has measured it into their plates.

The ages of the Walkenhorst progeny range from forty down to seven years. Besides the 12 children now at home, five have died, at various ages and the others, being older, have married and gone to homes of their own. There are eight grandchildren. Three of those who reside under the parental roof are working in factories in the town.

"How have I managed to take care of 25 children?" Frederick Walkenhorst echoed after my question, after he had fed his horses out in the barn and stood rolling up his sleeves at the kitchen sink. "By working hard every day." The hands he spread to view were testimony more eloquent even than the vigorous, clear ring of his voice, and his knitted coat, wet with perspiration, was further evidence of his hearty industry.

No Signs of Worry.
He is a tall, spare man, remarkably erect for his sixty years, fair and ruddy, and the lines on his face are not those of worry but of good humor. If his children take after him, dentist bills need not be one of the family problems. His teeth are strong and white. His eyes, he says, are failing. One doctor assures him nothing can be done for them, so he thinks any further expenditure on them is useless.

Never a brighter, merrier, roister, healthier looking lot of children ever gathered about a millionaire's board than those 12. Their heavy shoes made a lot of noise on the bare floors, but otherwise in an orderly line about the table, speechless in the presence of the strange visitor, their silent but radiant smiles reflected their father's pride in them.

Somewhere recently the writer came upon statistics to the effect that at the age of sixty-five no less than 64 per cent. of parents in this country are dependent upon their children for charity. Walkenhorst's next remark revealed another remarkable contrast in his attitude toward parenthood. He had spoken of his dimming eyes.

"I figure at the rate they are going my eyes are good for about five years more," he said. "I expect to work every day until I am blind. By that time Helen, the baby, will be old enough to do something for herself. Then I shall be through."

When a man's wife makes him help with the dish washing and the dusting he immediately begins to figure up to see if it would not be cheaper for them to live at a hotel.

"The most pitiful objects in this world are girls who act like men and men who act like girls."

FATHER POINT

Father Point Lighthouse, Foghorn Station and Keeper's House.

Father Point is a little Quebec cape jutting out into the St. Lawrence where it is still an ocean. It is here that the immigrant from European countries during the summer months gets his first human touch with Canada and Canadians.

Father Point would not appeal to the ordinary tourist or holiday maker. It is off the beaten track and only reached by car from Rimouski. Its charm is merely that of hundreds of other French Canadian villages which are more accessible. The fresh breeze blow from off the St. Lawrence as they do upon countless other fishing villages along the river shore. This place is a haven for the tired, the brain-taxed, the overworked and neurotic in its meditative calm and brooding hush.

The great interest in the little hamlet is for those who go down to the sea in ships. Near the extremity of the point a modern lighthouse has been erected which each night flashes its warning light across twenty miles of water. In close proximity is the great foghorn blasting its message when fog shrouds the light. Upon the hill stands a wireless station which receives advice of every vessel entering the Gulf before it proceeds up the river. A coastguard and life-saving station completes the precautions for the preservation of vessel and man upon the water.

But greatest interest centres in the "Eureka," the sturdy little government pilot boat which leaves its pier on the point to take out a river guide for all vessels going up to Quebec or Montreal. When the wireless report is received of the approach of a vessel all eyes are turned riverwards and glasses and telescopes focused upon the speck on the horizon following it as it takes shape over the rim of the sea.
