

Make the Crowd Follow Your Path

Emerson said that if a man made a better mousetrap than his neighbor the people would beat a path to his door to buy it. He was wrong.

Selling strategy must overcome competition in the open market.

A man today must first make a better mousetrap—then take it to the public—tell them why it is better—what it costs—and where to buy it.

Does your sales manager realize that a 10,000 line campaign in every daily newspaper in Canada costs less than the three-cent stamp on one letter to each family.

Make the crowd follow your path to the retail store.
