Speed!

Man's yearning for speed and efficiency in transportation has resulted in many changes.

The stage coach gave way to the steam railway; the horse car was succeeded by the electric tram. The present age is becoming more and more one of electricity in rapid transit.

Many years of research, coupled with supreme manufacturing skill, have produced the modern traction motor for street car and electric locomotive.

Controllers, storage batteries, switches, electric couplers do their part. Behind the power-bearing wires are whirling generators, alternators, static transformers, rotary converters—a mass of apparatus.

The experience and technical resources of the English Electric Company, Limited, of Great Britain, gained during many years in installing complete tramway and electric railroad systems the world over, is placed unreservedly at the disposal of its Canadian associate, the English Electric Company of Canada Limited.

Investors can share in the development of this industry. Write for full information.
