REACHES GREAT
AGE OF 103

Joseph 'Dafoe, Formerly of
Flinton, in House of Providence.

Joseph Dafoe, an inmate of the Kingston House of Providence, is probably the oldest man in Canada to-day, his age, according to his statement, being 103 years. He is enjoying splendid health, his mind is clear, hearing good, but his eyesight is not what it was. He was visited by a Whig reporter who found him talkative. He appeared to be a man in the eighties, but he has a remarkable memory and recalled incidents in own experience that corroborates his claim to greater age. He is a French-Canadian, having been born twenty miles east of Montreal at a place then called Grand St. Spree but since changed. His proper name is Ferdinand Larmont, although he ceased to use that name since he was twenty years old. Asked how that came about, he said that he left home at that time and joined a river-driving camp for lumbering in Ontario when then at its height. It was carried on very extensively in Ontario. The men of the camp declared that he resembled Joe Dafoe, who had been a member of the river-driving gang, and they persisted in calling him Joe Dafoe, and Joe Dafoe he remained ever after.

He never visited his home after that and does not know whether any of his family are now living. His mother died during a cholera epidemic when he was a lad. After working continuously at lumbering for over fifty years, he turned to farming and finally bought a farm and married. He had one daughter, who resided with him after his wife died. This daughter married, and he turned over to her all of his property, including the farm, with the provision that she would support him during the remainder of his life. This was carried out until she died. Her husband, however, lost the property and he was deprived of all protection and support. He was residing alone and practically destitute at Flinton, Hastings county, last April, when he was taken charge of and brought to the House of Providence. He was very frail upon his arrival at the institution, and was put to bed where he remained for a whole week, during which time he recuperated wonderfully despite his great age and was soon once more able to be about.

Asked whether he ever had any serious illness, he replied that he was very ill many years ago. He became unconscious and his friends declared him dead. A coffin was bought and brought to his room, but when they came to lift him into the coffin he raised his head and looked about. They were so shocked that one of them fainted and dropped to the floor. The coffin was hurriedly removed from the room, and when he asked if he had not seen a coffin, they denied that there had been a coffin in the room. It was taken upstairs for the time being and finally sent away.

This centenarian is happy at the House of Providence where he is so well taken care of by the Sisters of Charity.
