"The Old Order Changeth"

Kingston market place as seen from the Whig office window to-day presents a very different appearance to the same place ten years ago.

The old cobble stones, which mark a stream of mud, gone too is the fountain, delight of dogs and horses, perhaps because the motor has largely replaced the faithful animals who drew the heavy loads for long miles through the muddy roads, starting before the break of day with a lantern fastened to the front of the old democrat to guide their steps.

Today motor cars and motor trucks, laden with vegetables, stand in rows along the fine new pavement and another row of cars almost blocks King street waiting to carry home the heavy market baskets of the purchasers. Gone too, alas, are the bargains the Kingston housewives used to get in melons and cauliflowers when the crop was large, the pair of chickens which it was said, "Oh, well, this is the last pair, I'll give them to you cheap to get off the market"; and many another chance for the housemother to reduce the family expenditure. But the piles of beautiful fresh vegetables and fruit, fresh butter and eggs fowls and during the summer, flowers, are to be found on both markets and the price is moderate; and many housekeepers say "their money goes farther on the market than in the shops and they are sure everything is fresh."

What the Editor Hears

That the historical society should see that the old Parliament House on Queen's street, where the treaty of Paris was signed by Canada's representatives, should be preserved, and not show the fate of those relics of early days, the old block houses, now demolished.

That the exhibition of pictures at Kirkpatrick's art gallery is receiving much favorable comment from the art critics.

That low heeled shoes are the vogue, excepting of course for evening wear, and even then the heels are not nearly as high as formerly.

That the London restaurants notify their women customers that 6d. a hole will be charged for damage done by cigarette ash.

That many articles of warm clothing and comparatively few useless and out of date ornaments were on view at the rummage sale held in the Island market on Wednesday, by the Mother's Council of the Y. M. C. A.

That fur will be much used as a hat garniture this winter.

Women of Putumayo, Brazil, whose usual attire is confined to beads, have taken to painting gowns on their bodies in imitation of those worn by white women.

It is said that the whisper of a beautiful woman can be heard further than the loudest yell of duty. Indolence often assumes the mask of patience and gathers in her rewards.

Beauty is skin-deep, but all thick-skinned people are not beautiful. The man who tells you the faults of others will tell others of yours.

To-morrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

FRIDAY, OCT. 14.

This promises to be another insignificant day, according to the lack of aspects in the astrological figure. There is but a single lunar transit—the Moon in opposition to Venus, which is an unpleasant position, indicative of sorrow, disappointment or other troublesome situations in the domestic, social or affectional relations. It points to scandalous or clandestine associations or possible quarrels, extravagances or self-indulgence. A mutual aspect suggests spiritual or psychic activities.

Those whose birthday it is may look for a quiet year in business, but their domestic, social or affectional matters may cause grief or disappointment. They should guard against all manner of self-indulgence, in pleasure or unconventional social activities. A child born on this day is likely to be over-born of pleasure and social indulgence to the detriment of its progress in its other undertakings unless wisely trained.

People born on this day should re-
