Officials of the Ferguson avenue disposal works, Hamilton, emptied the sludge vials there, and made a careful sifting of the residue, in the hope that the $10,000 worth of radium lost at the General Hospital over the week-end would be found. Their search, however, availed nothing. The U. S. senate voted 39 to 27, against retaining the excess profits tax after next July 1st at the present rates.

Science Finds That Oyster Shells Make Hens Lay More Eggs

"Hens do not like oyster shell when dirty, resulting from throwing it on the ground of the feeding pen. Keep the shell in a clean hopper, where the hens may feed on it as they like."

HOW many people who keep a few hens to supply their table with eggs, ever stop to think, while sitting before a plate of oysters on the half shell, that the shells consist of one of Nature's best foods for poultry? The oyster shell is composed of from 80 to 90 per cent pure carbonate of lime or calcium carbonate, and when properly dried and crushed into flakes about half the size of the fingernail and fed to the laying hen, makes possible the greater production of eggs. Poultry, like human beings, requires some form of calcium in their diet.

An interesting bulletin, just issued by the Oyster Shell Products Bureau at Washington, makes public the results of recent scientific experiments conducted at various State institutions of agriculture. These studies have demonstrated that properly prepared and fed crushed oyster shells form the best calcium (lime) ingredient of a layer's diet; that a prominent cause of low egg production, particularly during the late winter months, may be due to a lack of sufficient calcium in the poultry ration; that the average cost of feeding shell amounts to but from 3 to 5 cents per hen a year, and that oyster shell, when placed in the feeding pen for the poultry to pick at when they want it, will actually increase the egg yield.

Some poultry raisers have the idea that if a hen does not get enough of lime (oyster shell) in her ration, she will lay soft-shell eggs, but this popular theory has been upset somewhat by experimental evidence. What does happen, however, is that the hen will continue to lay a hard egg, but with a low production of eggs until she accumulates a supply of calcium (shell) material. Poultry science is now of the opinion that the laying of soft eggs is due to some pathological condition rather than to the lack of calcium in the feed. So, then, the hen who produces soft eggs until she lays a soft egg and thus arrives at the belief that it's time to begin feeding the shell.

The proper preparation of shell feed is shown to be important. This is done by manufacturers who put the shells through a process of drying, cleaning, crushing and sifting, resulting in a low in weight between the crude oyster shell and the finished poultry product of 94 per cent. Practical study of the feeding habits of poultry has greatly improved the quality of shell foods and the favorable effect from their use in egg production.

CAINTOWN.

Oct. 22.—Heavy rains that have fallen in the past week will improve plowing and also put water in wells as a good many of them were nearly dry. This vicinity was visited by two very severe electric storms this week but no damage has been reported. The farmers, who are fortunate enough to have apples for sale, will not have much trouble picking them off the bushes as the heavy wind storms daily have already done that, but they will be "hand picked" just the same, no doubt. The farmers' club is to hold a meeting in the Caintown School house Tuesday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Morris visited near Athens on Sunday last. Mrs. Walsh, Montreal, is the guest of Mrs. James L. Scott. Mrs. Trickey, Lake Elvidia, enjoyed the week-end here with her sister, Mrs. James Scott. Mrs. E. C.
