A CANADIAN NIGHTINGALE

Miss Bertha Crawford Who Appears in Grant Hall Thursday Evening.

Golden hair caught high on a shapely head, and straying in tiny ringlets on the white brow above the dark blue eyes with their long dark lashes, a bright, vivacious face, that changes rapidly from grave to gay as she talks, a slender girlish figure, beautiful hands and feet—such is Miss Bertha Crawford as she appeared to the Whig as she sat beside a glowing grate fire, drinking coffee, a bit tired after her journey from Toronto, but so pleased to be back in Canada, her homeland, after years of war worn Europe, that even a slow train, so long as it was a Canadian train, seemed great in her eyes.

"Yes, I went to England in 1911, spent a year and a half there, went to Italy to sing and on to Warsaw. I was there in 1914 and as the German hordes advanced on Poland, it became dreadful in the capital. Guns, guns all day, and all night, bombs dropping in the street. Oh, it was terrible." So the Canadian girl went to Petrograd, where she soon became the idol of the Russians, whose restlessness she calmed with her lovely voice. They were so impatient, she said, "They wouldn't let me finish even speaking of the 'Caro Nome.' They would have me sing the Aria over." Some one laughed and said, "We hope a Kingston audience will at least let you finish."

Miss Crawford sang in Moscow, Kiev, in the Crimea. Every little town has an opera house where the best music is heard. The songstress appeared at the Great Winter Palace at Petrograd at a concert arranged by the ill-fated Empress of Russia and some of the grand duchesses, in aid of the Red Cross, and later, when Bolshevism had taken its deadly hold on the people of eastern Europe, saw the same room with its wonderful tapestries slashed with swords, its pictures cut from top to bottom, the whole a scene of ruin and desolation. Miss Crawford saw a great deal of the Russian court while she was at Petrograd with General Stackol, honorary director of the court orchestra.

At a dinner at Petrograd she once met Rasputin, the Russian monk who attained such power, largely hypnotic, over the Empress. "He was horrible, horrible," said Miss Crawford, with a shudder. "But it was the prince. As long as he was there the child seemed better and when he went he grew worse, he hypnotized him."

Miss Crawford does not like to talk of the terrible sights or sounds of war. She made many friends in Warsaw and among the dearest are her tiny dogs, four Griffon Belge, a Toy terrier, and perhaps the dearest of them all, "The Stray," a Spitz, picked up on the streets of Warsaw, and tenderly cared for. Two have been the singer's constant companions. "One is a singer, too," she laughed. "He takes all my high notes perfectly. It is so funny to see him put up his head and get the exact note."

The programme for tonight's concert contains many gems that will be sung with a voice whose equal has never been heard in Kingston, by a simple, unaffected Canadian girl, utterly unspoiled by the wonderful success she has had among the peoples to whom real music is life.

WIN SWIMMING AWARD.

Six More Boys Successful in the Y. M. C. A. Tests. Of the six boys who were given their first life-saving test at the Y. M.C.A. on Wednesday afternoon, all were successful in winning the award and Physical Director Dean is greatly pleased with the result. Among these boys Edward Fitzgerald, the 85 pound contestant, showed remarkable skill throughout the trial and even towed a boy twice his weight twenty yards. Morris Spelman and John Stephen are also mentioned for their splendid showing.

These tests are to be held every month, and many of the boys have already entered to try for the award. Those passing their first test were: Will Graves, Edgar Batten, Morris Spelman, John Stephen, Edgar Edward Fitzgerald and Charles Bartella. Great credit is given to Lachlan MacKinnon who coached the boys, and who is himself a bronze medalist. Every Wednesday afternoon throughout the winter season is devoted to the teaching of the younger boys to swim. Last season forty-one boys were taught to swim in the "Y" tank, and the great advantage of this is that the youngsters teach their playmates when out at the bathing beaches, thus helping to lessen the drowning tragedies which have become so frequent in recent years.

INDIA AND MISSIONS.

Rev. J. Fraser Campbell at Convocation Hall.

Before a rather small gathering of students, with a fair sprinkling of the general public, Rev. J. Fraser Campbell spoke in Convocation Hall Wednesday night on "India and the Work of the Missions." Dr. Campbell whose special field of labor was at Raikam, Central India, is a distinguished missionary and has occupied the moderator's chair of the general assembly in India, where he has spent forty-five years.

The speaker expressed the wish that some of the students present would eventually go out to the foreign mission field. He remarked that while in Canada, one or two thousand and was considered a good congregation, in India he could quite readily promise the young minister a congregation of one hundred thousand. He then went on to describe the different peoples and religions in the country.

"Is there any use of our going to this country?" asked the speaker. "Will they listen to us, especially in these days of unrest? The enthusiastic answer to this is that the people were never so ready to receive us with open arms as they are today. The government census papers tell us that the ratio of increase of the Christians is about five times that of the ratio of increase for the whole population. Far more important than the actual number of converts, is the permeating influence of Christian teaching, and the people are unconsciously drinking in these sentiments, thus preparing the way for conversion."

The speaker remarked that this was one of the most hopeful signs of the present day and closed his remarks by asking the audience just what they would take in dollars and cents for their knowledge and belief in Christ, and if this was so precious to them, what about their brothers out in India. These people have so-ne knowledge, with a great chance for more, if help were only given them.

Honor Among Thieves. Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 27.—James Thomas, of no fixed abode, sentenced to two years in penitentiary for theft, refused to divulge the name of an accomplice. He said:

"If I told you I would only drag some one else to the penitentiary with me. So, although, I could tell you, I guess I will do my little bit alone."

Jewelry valued at $60,000 and an automobile were stolen at Los Angeles, Cal., by two men who drove the car away.
