Boyhood Home of Sir Sandford Fleming

Where the long rollers of the blue waters of Georgian Bay break upon shores of Grey county, a few miles westward of Collingwood, stands "Cragleith," an old white house, whose gables rise from the surrounding trees, that is of interest in Canadian history and of special interest to Kingstonsians and Queen's, for it is the boyhood home of Sir Sandford Fleming, for years chancellor of Queen's University, at whose hands so many distinguished Canadians have received degrees in arts, science, theology or medicine.

Coming from Kirkcaldy, Scotland, in the early part of the last century Andrew Greig Fleming, built this substantial house on the wild shores of Georgian Bay, naming it after his Scottish home. Here Mr. Fleming and his young Canadian wife, Jean Hall, a daughter of Sheriff Hall, of Peterborough, lived, their son Sandford, a student even in his early days, is remembered by the older inhabitants, strolling in the garden intent upon his book. One of his brothers was exceptionally clever with his fingers so the mantle pieces and doors of "Cragleith" are marvels of beautiful carving and in the garden is an old sundial carved by the same clever hand. But long before Andrew Fleming made his home in the lovely spot at the foot of the Blue Mountain the wigwams of the Huron tribes nestled at its foot and the fair lands of "Cragleith" were the battle ground where they met the fierce Algonquins in mortal combat as the many relics now in Canadian museums show, and not long ago a splendid totem pole was found at Eugene Falls on the Beaver River not many miles away. The Blue Mountain, rising at one time directly from the waters of the Georgian Bay is still crowned with forest and still the faint blue cloud hovers above its summit believed by the tribes to be the visible form of the Great Spirit. For many miles the old trails led to the mountain where like the Jews of old the Indians worshiped their God in the high places. From the Beaver valley from the shores of the Indian river the trails all lead to this sacred spot where they "groping blindly in the darkness, touched God's right hand in that darkness, and were lifted up and strengthened," so wrote Longfellow in "Hiawatha," and who shall gain any hint? At a recent exhibition of pictures by Miss Marsh, held in Kingston, a painting of "Cragleith" was sold to a connection of the Fleming family who are still the owners of this house with its niche in Canadian history.

To-morrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

THURSDAY, NOV. 3RD. Anxious conditions are due to prevail on this day, judging from the adverse angles of some of the important planets. The chief menace lies in the tendency to irritability, impetuosity and misjudgment. With this proclivity under control there is good prospect of pulling through safely, as the sinister forces are in rather negative operation. Those in the employment of others should be amiable and guard the truth. The impulse to fly to law for redress for grievances should be checked, as there are indications that such measures may end disastrously.

Those whose birthday it is have the forecast of a year of possible perplexity in business unless they keep firm control on their temper, use the classified advertisements, and refrain from rash and reckless manoeuvres, especially stunning litigation. A child born on this day may be very quick of tongue and temper, with the tendency to disregard the truth in order to gain a point unless well-trained in early life.

TO-DAY'S FASHION

By Vera Winston.

This Lovely Frock of Black Crepe Marocain Has sleeves of Jade Green.

One of the most delightful fashions at the present time is revealed in this model. It shows the dress fashioned from black crepe Marocain with sleeves of jade green crepe. The gown is modeled on the plainest lines, for the crepe is simply draped about the figure and drawn toward a back, where it is slightly raised. Its exciting tightness contrasts vividly with the wide sleeves. These also reveal another interesting style touch, for they are dropped downwards on the arm so that the top of the shoulder is apparent. Other interesting color combinations would look equally well should you desire to copy this dress.
