BIG ROW AT HARROWSMITH; CROWD RUSHES PLATFORM

Continued from Page One. lars in the interests of agriculture. Thirteen new experimental farms had been established. The speaker said he realized that the farmers had been up against it this year.

"But you got good prices during the war," added Dr. Edwards. "As far as your business was concerned, you did not know that there was a war. You sold your produce and there was no hitch. And why? Because of the financial arrangements made at Ottawa for you to sell overseas.

There were two parties before the people today. The party led by Premier Meighen and that under the leadership of Mr. Crerar. "It has been said that the Meighen government is a government of high protection. That is not true, and was never true.

"The government I am supporting is not in favor of high protection. We believe in the principle of protection recognized in the fiscal policy. So much protection to industries to keep them working and so we will see, Canadians working in Canadian factories, and not in factories across the line. I do not say that the tariff does not need revision. I say it does perhaps need some revision.

Dr. Edwards declared if the bars were let down the farmers would not get the highest prices. Under Mr. Crerar's policy the farmers would never be permitted to enjoy the best selling prices. Then again, Canada would not only have to compete with the States, but also Argentina, where they had no winter climate to contend with, and where labor was cheaper.

Dr. Edwards stated that he accomplished things for his county, and proceeded to mention various matters given his attention. He asked for a square deal. The present was a time when men of experience were needed in the handling of public affairs.

U.F.O. Candidate Called. When Dr. Edwards closed his address, the chairman called on William S. Reed, the U.F.O. candidate, and he was greeted with loud cheering. Mr. Reed stated that he would only speak a few minutes.

Speech of J. R. McMillan. The chairman then introduced Mr. McMillan, who stated at the outset that the big gathering of farmers present at the meeting, showed that they were taking an interest in the affairs of the country. The farmers had commenced to realize that it was time that their interest should be looked after.

The speaker first dealt a blow at the Meighen government. He said this government was trying to make the tariff the "only" issue. The Meighen government wanted to crowd all the other issues out. The farmers had only within recent years commenced to stand up for their rights. It was only within the last eight years that the farmers in Ontario had commenced to take notice of things. While the farmers in the western part of Canada had been giving the matter study for twenty years.

Mr. McMillan said the Canadian Manufacturers Association had been conducting an educational campaign in an endeavor to try and mould public opinion. Why should a duty be placed on farm implements? The farmers should stand on their own feet. Why should the influential interests be protected and take the money out of the pocket of the farmers?

"That is not true," said Dr. Edwards. "It is true, and I can prove it," said Mr. McMillan. Mr. Crerar had been charged with wanting to put a direct tax on the farm land. This was not so. "His policy says so," said Dr. Edwards.

Says Money Squandered. "As far as the country is concerned, the money has been squandered by the millions," said Mr. McMillan. "It is your money. Take the civil service. It is costing us far too much money. No man can tell us just how much we are paying for the civil service."

The speaker charged the Grits and Tories alike, with extravagance. "And we have been voting them into power just because our fathers and our grandfathers voted that way," he added. "And we have been doing this instead of looking after our own interests. This new organization of the farmers was organized because of the way in which these old parties have been carrying on the business."

Bad Railway Business. The speaker took a rap at the government over its dealings with railway companies. He said the line between Moncton and Port William should never have been built. There had been great extravagance in all the railway policies.

The speaker also condemned Dr. Edwards for his stand in the house on the oleomargarine question. He gave a history of the progressive movement, and declared that all the farmers wanted in this contest was fair play. He charged both of the old political parties with having allowed industrial concerns to have "watered stock." He asked the farmers how long they were going to stand for such things.

Should be a Cleanup. The speaker stated that if the farmers in Canada sold goods to Great Britain, they must trade back. The day was coming, he declared, when we would have reciprocity. In 1911 the manufacturers opposed it as they could see that the farmers got a bit of it they would want more.

The progressives were out to put the country first, and leave old parties behind. Mr. McMillan did not even overlook the Senate, which he described as "The House of Refuge." He said that at the present time, the house was not in session, but in spite of this fact, eight stenographers were on the job, engaged in looking after the private business of senators.

When Mr. McMillan concluded his speech, the chairman, following out the agreement made before the meeting opened, called on Dr. Edwards for his fifteen-minute reply, but as the doctor was about to start, he was met with an uproar. Cries of "Sit down!" were heard all over the hall. Several times Dr. Edwards endeavored to make himself heard but he was forced to give up the task. Every few minutes he would make an attempt to speak.

Bedlam Let Loose. But it was as if bedlam had been let loose. All over the hall there was disorder and through it all Dr. Edwards stood his ground ready to speak when the opportunity presented itself.

audience did their best to let the doctor get a hearing, but things went from bad to worse, and the chairman was powerless. The disturbers took things into their own hands, and for several minutes there was a very wild time. The scene beggars description.

And then the last straw to break the camel's back as it were, was forthcoming. It was the row that Dr. Edwards and Mr. Bushell got mixed up in. Mr. Bushell had a chair close to where Dr. Edwards was standing. They had some words. Both waxed very warm, and they closed in on each other. Then the crowd endeavored to rush the platform. And the fight was then on in earnest.

A Disgraceful Scene. It was a most disgraceful scene. Seats were overturned, and it was a miracle that there were no casualties. When the din of battle subsided a little, Dr. Edwards did speak, but even at that, there was so much commotion that he could not be heard distinctly. He said he was very sorry for what had occurred, but added that if he had not resented what had been said, he could not be classed as a man with red blood in his veins.

On the Firing Line. "We fought for our country," one man in the audience called to Mr. McMillan. "Yes, perhaps you did," replied Mr. McMillan, "but are you not going to continue to fight for your country now? Are you going to lie down?" "This is the first time in my experience that I ever had to stop a speech because of the fact that I was

day. Old campaigners were free to admit that not in forty years had there been such a demonstration at any political gathering in Frontenac county, and many expressed the hope that such a thing would not occur again. As already stated, both Dr. Edwards and Mr. McMillan were interrupted in their speeches many times. On one occasion Dr. Edwards was heard to say to certain parties, "No, I could not expect any support from you, and it is not for any political reason."
