HE STOLE A RIDE.

But Rose to Honored Position as Railroad Employer.

The railways claim the loss of millions annually in unpaid fares from the gentry who consider the blind baggage or the open box car preferable to the day coach. The non-paying guests of the common carriers say that a brake-beam is as good for sight-seeing as an observation coach. They prefer cheating the company from the bumpers to being cheated by the company in the diner.

Not all such travelers are confirmed hoboes. Some are college students or farmers' sons seeing the continent on a summer holiday. One York County farmer lad tells of getting to sunny Southern California and return by the box car route without paying a penny. Once he was one of over fifty to drop off a freight in a wreck. The conductor, accepting the situation, rounded them all up and announced: "Gentlemen, knights of the road, we've given you a free ride; we're in trouble; help us out." And they did. As a wrecking crew they were excellent. When the track was clear, the train crew turned the blind eye while all hopped aboard and continued their journey.

But whoever heard of a box car expert repaying the company with a lifetime of service? The exception is now discovered. Frank P. Mullen, formerly of Joyceville, Ont., who tells the Gananoque Reporter that he left home 43 years ago in a box car. He has since risen to become general superintendent of construction on one of the roads which involuntarily took him West. He came home in an automobile, scorning even the de luxe trains of his own Great Northern Railway.

All of which may present his comrades of the free rail ride with the motto: "Go and do thou likewise! if you cannot pay now, give the nation and the railways your best services."

Seaweed as a Food.

Scientists have been investigating the possibilities of seaweeds as producers of materials useful for food and other purposes.

The first experiments were made with the common "Irish moss," which is plentifully found along the coast of Nova Scotia. It yields a gelatinous substance which has long been in use for the sizing of paper and cloth, in the manufacture of soaps, paints, dyes and hair ointments, and in the preparation of certain medicines and foods.

It is found that the gelatine derived from this kind of seaweed serves admirably as a medium in which to pack fish that are otherwise too soft to "stand up" in cans. Gelatinous product called "agar-agar," derived from certain red seaweeds, which is used in making foods and confections. Also it is the best-known substance on which to grow "cultures" of bacteria, and medical laboratories and hospitals could hardly get along without supplies of it.

Recent experiments have proved that two species of seaweeds common on our Pacific coast yield agar-agar equal or superior to the imported article. Before long, therefore, we ought to be able to produce for ourselves all of it that we need.

It is found that only the red seaweeds yield gelatinous products useful for food or other purposes such as those above mentioned. They are not obtainable from the green species.

From the brown seaweeds is derived a substance called "aligin," which may, it is thought, become commercially important in the preparation of waterproof fabrics.

In the Good Old Days.

Down across the creek there were a hundred acres of bottom land that always laughed a harvest. Yet the market for surplus products was distant, so luxury and leisure were out of the question. And yet work wasn't drudgery.

Woods, hills, running streams, the open road, the sawmill and the gristmill, the path across the meadow—the miracle of the seasons, the sugar bush, the freshet that carried away the bridge, the first spring flowers peeping from the snow on the south side of rotting logs, the trees bursting into leaf, the hills white with blossoms of wild cherry and hawthorn, the Saturday afternoon when the boys could fish, the old swimming hole, the bathing of the little ones in the creek, the growing crops in the bottom land, bee trees and wild honey, coon hunts by moonlight, the track of deer down by the salt-lick, bears in the green corn, harvet time, hog-killing days, frost upon the pumpkin and fodder in the shock, wild turkeys in the clearing, revival meetings, spelling bees, debates in the log schoolhouse, barn raisings, dances in the new barn, quilting bees, colts to break, apple butter, soft soap, pickled pig's feet, smoked hams, side meat, shelled walnuts, coon skins on the barn door, winter and first fall of snow, boots to grease, harness to mend, back logs, hickory nuts, cider, a few books and all the other enchanting things that a country life, not too isolated, brings to every one of us who was born where the rain makes musical patter on the roof. Are any of these applicable to your memories of the days you spent on the farm? asks The Teller, a house organ of the Sterling Bank.

Antiquity of Asbestos.

The silky fibre derived from certain rocks which we call asbestos was familiar to the ancient Greeks and Romans, and was commonly used by them to make fireproof rope, and fireproof cloth. These are the uses to which asbestos is chiefly put at the present time. It is now spun so fine that a pound of asbestos will yield two-thirds of a mile of thread. To "wash" a piece of asbestos cloth one has only to put it into fire. That cleans it. Canada's asbestos mines are very valuable.
