What the Editor Hears

That the quiet unobtrusive work of the Kingston Humane Society has greatly improved the condition of the dumb animals in the city and neighborhood, the provincial badges won by the president, inspector and veterinary surgeon, giving them power to act outside the city limits.

That it is said that Princess Mary is one of the best linguists among the younger royalties for she speaks French and German with a fluency unexcelled by her grandmother, and also knows Italian, Spanish, Norse and Danish.

That the world just at present seems to be sharply divided into two classes—one is the kind that goes to summer; the other, the kind that waits for summer to come to it.

That a Kingston woman speaking at a recent meeting, suggested that as a means to keep the husbands at home in the evening their wives discuss political questions with them. It is an open question, of course, which way this plan would work.

That the jumper frock has lived ably up to its name for it has jumped from last season to this, and has landed quite as firmly on its feet. The smocked peasant blouse will be its favorite gumpie.

That two prominent Kingston societies will give large balls before Lent.

That the fable of woman's un-punctuality is a red herring which man draws across the trail of his own chronic tardiness.

That the patients at Mowat Sanatorium greatly enjoy the entertainments provided by their friends in the city.

DISREGARD LENGTH OF SKIRT

Designers of the Rue de La Paix are creating skirts in every variety of measurement. Here is one of medium length, but noticeable fullness, criss-crossed with plaited ruchings. The bodice is plain but for bands of the same trimming at wrist and shoulder. All is of taffeta.

COLLARS AND JABOT GUIMPES

Net and Organdie Combined in Neckwear Featuring the Directorate is Wincom.

Frequently net and organdie are combined in gilets or guimpes featuring the directorie collar. The collar is of white organdie, while the vest portion is of tucked net trimmed with vertical stripes of fluted white organdie bound with black kid. The collar consists of a high, straight band topped by a bristling frill of plaited organdie bound with the black kid. There is a smart cravat of white organdie, its pointed ends tipped with black, and a very narrow black kid belt.

Flattering jabot guimpes are much in evidence. All are of fine imported materials with delicate hand embroidery, usually in white, although occasionally a bit of color is introduced, but it is more often in the form of a binding than embroidery.

For schoolgirls' frocks there are the plain round collars and cuffs of heavy linen, and for more dressed-up occasions narrow collars and cuffs made entirely of lace ruffles.

SIMPLE CLOTHES FOR GIRLS

Having small children attractively outfitted is not at all a question of having a lot of money to spend on their clothes. It is one of taste and good judgment in the selection of materials and in having things to match. Socks and hair ribbons, if ribbons are worn, should be bought to match the dress.

The question of school frocks confronts the mother of girls of school age, and many style suggestions are available.

Fortunately, children's clothes are not subject to very radical style change. For coming season there is a pronounced leaning to either very bright colors or black, and fabric combinations are approved as usual.

One little navy serge frock recently shown was smartly trimmed with yoke and bandings of bright red flannel, and a little navy crepe de chine had a bright yellow yoke and cuffs, a sash belt was drawn through a flower rosette of the georgette at the side.

Crepe de chine and the heavier silk crepe are being used for many dressy frocks for children for the season.

EMBROIDERY FOR BED LINEN

Colored Decorations Now Considered Very Fetching on the Sheets and Pillow Cases.

The old-fashioned housewife insists that pure white, glossy, smooth sheets are the only proper sort of sheets, and of course admits that if the sheets are of real linen the acme of sheet perfection has been reached.

The modern housewife agrees insofar as the linen sheets are concerned; no bed is as beautifully and artistically dressed as the one with pure linen sheets and pillow cases, but colored embroidery is now considered a very fetching addition to beautiful white linen sheets.

Net Lamp Shades. Lamp shades made of net are attractive in the room. For a living room select a colored silk for your foundation. Be careful to get something that will give the note of brilliancy needed and yet will not cast an unbecoming light on the face of the guests.

What Queen's Girls Are Doing

Grant and Convocation halls have been filled to overflowing during the past week by unfortunate mortals endeavoring to transmit their small knowledge to paper.

All week the rink was passed with averted eyes, but the question was anxiously asked: "What are you wearing to the carnival?"

Meds '26 are departing from the usual custom of holding the weekly social evening from 7 to 11 p.m., and are having theirs on Wednesday from 9 to 1 o'clock to give everyone the opportunity of attending the carnival first. No doubt many of the guests will be in fancy dress.

The reaction after the week's work, brought out a crowd of girls to the rink on Saturday afternoon.

Everyone is looking forward to the arts dance on Tuesday, Jan. 24th, when Mrs. Bruce Taylor, Mrs. O. D. Skelton, Mrs. John Macgillivray and Mrs. J. L. Morrison have kindly consented to act as patronesses.

There will be a meeting of the theatre night committee on Monday. The girls are busily planning their contribution to the programme.

The Effects of Jazz "Music"

"There is nothing wrong with the morals of the boy and the girl today. The difficulty lies in the poison we feed them and the example we set them."

William A. McKeever, a lecturer and an authority on juvenile problems, writes: "The cheek-to-cheek form of dancing is a menace to the morals of our young people and to the future of our nation. And Jazz music is the most detrimental factor with which we have to contend in keeping dances clean."

Those who read the foregoing statements might think them the words of a pious Sunday school superintendent. But no. They are taken from an address by a Chicago dancing master, as delivered to an assembly of clergymen.

"Jazz has the same disorganizing effect on the nervous system as moonshine liquor. The uncanny notes of the hoodoo strain produce a queer swimming sensation in the listener's head, nerves are a-tingle and there is created a curious intoxicated feeling."

Again we are quoting from no moralist, but from Dr. Frank Norton, of Madison, Wis., an acoustic engineer and a nationally known musical scientist.

These non-educators are right and here they become the valuable instructors of us teachers. Do away with jazz music entirely, they contend; restore the soothing, rhythmic classic in its stead and you will thus solve at a stroke the problem of insouciant dancing. Dr. Norton has even gone so far as to prove the matter with witnesses to test his method. He had a roomful of young people dancing in open, decent form to the classic strains, when suddenly the jazz was turned on. Very soon the young couples impulsively changed to the grips and contortions of the shimmy.

Scores of sphygmograph tests and tracings which I have made of the heart action of youths while listening to jazz music support the idea of jazz musical intoxication from another angle. While listening to such a piece as "Traumerei," for example, the heartbeat is slow, quiet and even. The riotous, jazz type of music causes a wild, eccentric heartbeat, with alternating suppression, acceleration and deep, jerky emotional swells. There is outside evidence here that the hot blood is sent splashing into every recess of the brain. We may notice also that the eyes "dance" in a kind of wild ecstasy.

TO-DAY'S FASHION

By Vera Winston.

Black Elephants France Gaily About the Hem and Neckline of This Child's Frock.

The rogue for frocks of chenille is by no means confined to the grown-up generation. As usual, the tiny daughters are following closely upon the heels of their mothers, and this miniature model of chenille furnishes a charming example.

Blue and lavender form a lovely color blend, emphasized by the background of black chenille. The chenille is applied in squares so that the background shows through to form crossing black lines. But the black elephants prancing gaily about the hem and neckline make the frock dear to the heart of its childish wearer.

A shirred band of cream Georgette finishes the dainty neckline.
