"THE GREAT WAR AS I SAW IT."

By Canon F. G. Scott, C. M. G., D. S. O., of Quebec, Senior Chaplain of the First Canadian Division.

Near the Canadian Headquarters at Sally there was a large steam laundry which was used as a bath for our men. It was a Godsend to them, for the scarcity of water made cleanliness difficult. The laundry during bath hours was a curious spectacle. Scores of large cauldrons of steaming water covered the floor. In each sat a man with only his head and shoulders showing, looking as if he were being boiled to death. In the mists of the heated atmosphere and in the dim light of candles, one was reminded of Dore's illustrations of Dante's Inferno. In one of them he represents a certain type of sinner as being tormented forever in boiling water.

"The Lord Will Provide."
We had now finished our time in this part of the line and the Division was ordered back for a rest. The General was troubled about my transportation as I had no horse, but I quoted my favorite text, "The Lord will provide." It made him quite angry when I quoted the text, and he told me that we were engaged in a big war and could not take things so easily. When, however, he had seen me on various occasions picked up by stray motor cars and lorries and get to our destination before he did, he began to think there was more in the text than he had imagined. I was accused of helping Providence unduly by base subterfuges such as standing in the middle of a road and compelling the motor to stop until I got in. I considered that my being able to stop the car was really a part of the providing. In fact I found that if one only had courage to stand long enough in the middle of the road without moving, almost any car, were it that of a private or a general, would come to a standstill. It was only a natural thing, when the car had stopped, to go to the occupants and say, "I know the Lord has sent you for the purpose of giving me a lift." It was quite a natural consequence of this for me to be taken in. One day at Estaires I tried to commandeer a fine car standing in the square, but desisted when I was informed by the driver that it was the private property of the Prince of Wales. I am sure that if the Prince had been there to hear the text he would have driven me anywhere I wanted to go.

On the present occasion I had not gone far down the road before a car picked me up and took me on my way—an incident which I narrated to the General afterwards with intense satisfaction.

CHAPETRE 3.

The Second Battle of Ypres, April 22nd, 1915.

Behind my house at Ypres there was an old-fashioned garden which was attended to very carefully by my landlady. A summer-house gave a fine view of the waters of the Yser Canal, which was there quite wide. It was nice to see again a good-sized body of water, for the little streams often dignified by the name of rivers did not satisfy the Canadian ideas as to what rivers should be. A battalion was quartered in a large brick building several stories high on the East side of the canal. There was consequently much stid of life at that point, and from my summer-house on the wall I could talk to the men passing by. My billet was filled with a lot of heavy furniture which was prized very highly by its owners. Madame told me that she had buried twelve valuable clocks in the garden in case of a German advance. She also told me that her grandfather had seen from the windows the British going to the battle of Waterloo. She had both a piano and a harmonium, and took great pleasure in playing some of the hymns in our Canadian hymn book. I was so comfortable that I hoped our residence at Ypres might be of long duration. At night, however, sentry shells fell into the city. We could hear them ripping along with a sound like a trolley on a track, and then there would be a fearful crash. One night when returning from Brigade Headquarters near Wietje, I saw a magnificent display of fireworks that it was the night the British attacked HIM 60.

On Sunday, the 18th of April, I had a service for the 15th Battalion in one of the storerooms of the brick building beside the canal. Something told me that big things were going to happen. I had a feeling that we were resting on the top of a volcano. At the end of the service I prepared for my sudden call to ministrations on the battlefield by reserving the Blessed Sacrament.

On Monday some men had narrow escapes when a house was shelled and on the following day I went to the centre of the town with two officers to see the house which had been hit. They appeared to be in a hurry to get to the Square, so I went up one of the side streets to look at the damaged house. In a cellar nearby I found an old woman making lace. Her hunchback son was sitting beside her. While I was making a few purchases, we heard the ripping sound of an approaching shell. It grew louder, till at last a terrific crash told us that the monster had fallen not far off. At that moment a number of poor people crowded into an adjoining cellar, where they fell on their knees and began to say a litany. I stood at the door looking at them. It was a pitiful sight. There were one or two old men and some women, and some

BLACKMAILED DOCTOR.

Quebec Man Sent to Prison for Three Years.

Quebec, March 2.—Adelard Denis, aged 30 years, was sentenced to a term of three years in penitentiary by Magistrate Choquette in the Court of Sessions after he had been found guilty of blackmailing Dr. L. Bernard.

Denis, it was proved, had collected the sum of $109 from the doctor. He had gone to the doctor and had represented himself to be the husband of a woman whom the doctor had treated. He said that due to neglect on the part of the doctor he had been obliged to call in other physicians, and, as a result of the neglect, his wife was likely to die. On that occasion the doctor had given him a cheque for $9. Later Denis came and threatened the doctor with arrest and exposure unless he paid him $100. The doctor paid the amount, but later on making an investigation, he found out that Denis was not married and the woman he had referred to was his sister-in-law. He duly lodged a complaint against Denis, which resulted in his arrest and conviction.

It was found that Denis had already served a term of four months on a similar charge, and a term of two years in penitentiary for criminal immorality.
