"PRACTICAL EDUCATION"
 Address Before the Board of Trade by Prof. R. O. Joffe.

R. O. Joffe, professor of Latin, Queen's University, was chief speaker before the Board of Trade on Tuesday evening at the annual meeting, and he gave a most instructive address on the subject of "Practical Education." He showed the difference between education as understood in the purely technical sense, and education in the broadest sense, as shown in one whose powers are all trained, and who from a proper knowledge of the fundamental principles of life is better able to meet its vicissitudes, as well as contribute in service to the welfare of his community. After dealing with the term "practical," a word that has degenerated in use from its original meaning of a state of being to one of action, he said that one of the greatest difficulties we have to face in life is that we fail to think through the problems that confront us. This is especially so of the so-called practical and self-made men. These generally express a contempt for theory. This is often justified, but it is not quite well-founded.

The best definition of education is "harmonious development of all one's powers," and practical education in the real sense, and the noblest sense, was the realization of this. You cannot focus on "things" to the exclusion of the conditions of the earth. The brevity, swiftness and uncertainty of life all depend upon your education and ones attitude of mind which is determined by education. There are two attitudes or views. The first is "eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow ye die" and the other is, "I will do the work set for me while it is yet day." Upon education depends the choice between these opposite views. It is almost a certainty that one without musical training will regard jazz as the best music, and also that one having no real knowledge of art will choose the worst picture. You can develop either side by education only, for by education only can you produce an absolute result. This was proved conclusively by the speaker who cited the development of the national soul of Germany as revealed during the past ten years. The spirit of the German people was developed by education on during the last two generations. The people of that country fifty years ago were absolutely different from the people we know during the last ten years. The "scrap of paper" expression that became famous from its application to the Belgium treaty by the German chancellor was accounted for by the speaker by the education of Von Bethman-Hollweg. He got it in a history of Rome used in Germany, and in which the Roman Senate repudiated a treaty calling it "a scrap of paper." The German teaching was absolutely wrong and it permeated all classes of the people from the universities down. They taught that Germany was destined to rule the world, that her race was a race of super-men, and that might was right. Theirs was a straight case of cause and effect. You can do the same, but you must know what you want; the goal of the people, their ideals in life, and the attitude to be adopted.

It is for the people at large to decide what kind of teaching they want our children to get, the voice of the universities and colleges is not sufficient. One of the most foolish things is to allow a child to decide what his education shall be, and the parents that bring up children in that way are the greatest nuisances that a teacher has to contend with. The child will take the path of least resistance always, as it is the most natural thing to do. You can't develop mental power by giving up effort. You have got to give them something that will make the brain sweat. It is a law in the intellectual world as well as in the physical world. There are certain great laws of life that are always true, and anybody who tries to defeat them goes down to ruin. We must obey the great laws of life or meet disaster. If you give the child a trained mind it will face the problems of life and face them well.

Referring to the demand for technical training, Prof. Joffe said that it was a mistake to suppose that such training was sufficient. These things cannot be taught as the sum-total of education. There is a state of chaos in the educational world today. Such things as permanence, industry and character appear to have gone out of education, and the main trouble is the parent and not the child. Life should be a time of joy, but any system of education that does not inculcate in their fibre a few essential truths such as "you can get nothing without working for it" and you can not "get dividends" upon "watered stock." A parent who thinks that a child can spend all its time outside of school is frivolity, warns that child from the proper view of life, and is not doing the right thing by the child. Is there anything that a child can do that is worth while and spend five or six nights of the week out? No, it cannot be done.

Of the staple things in education the classics are the foundation of all literature, then come mathematics and pure science and history. Unless you get these things you are not getting any foundation upon which you can build. Power without responsibility is the child's view of life and we have been letting our children choose the easy way of education. In conclusion Prof. Joffe declared that a practical education was a preparation for life—not only to get something out of life, but to get something into it.
