

LOOKING FORWARD

By Juanita Hamel

Is it memory or expectation that makes almost any girl, when she takes up her tennis racket, think of the game? But how could it be otherwise when Cupid whispers in her ear, "Love—fifteen," and all the other magic phrases that tell of winning? She knows these are the countings of the tennis score, but she feels that they are also prophecies of winning in the greater game of—love!

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it—that its use for over 30 years has not proved.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY

FAMOUS "WITS" OF HISTORY

By MARK STUYVESANT.

The Way Oscar Wilde Introduced Himself to America. When the steamer bringing Oscar Wilde from England arrived in New York there were many representatives of the press ready and waiting to interview the famous poet and playwright—the author of "Lady Windermere's Fan," and "The Importance of Being Earnest." Wilde was very genial and talked freely to reporters on all occasions, but particularly on this one—the occasion of his introduction to the new world.

"I have Nothing to Declare But My Genius"

Wilde was in great demand as a dinner guest. It is not surprising, when he could say such amusing things in an off-hand manner, as he did once to a certain prominent hostess.

Wilde was an inveterate smoker, and was miserable if he couldn't have his cigarette. One evening, at a large dinner, the ladies, fascinated by Wilde's wit and brilliant conversation, lingered too long in the dining-room. Wilde wanted his cigarette and was anxious for the ladies to retire to the drawing-room so that he could smoke.

Suddenly his hostess glanced at a lamp near Wilde. The flame had grown too big, and the shade was starting to smoulder. She said: "Please, Mr. Wilde, put it out, it's smoking!"

Wilde jumped to avert what might have been a serious accident. He reached to turn down the wick, he remarked: "Happy lamp!"

Wilde said, as he flicked the ashes from his ever-present cigarette: "I have nothing to declare but my genius."

But Oscar Wilde's genius was a very wonderful possession to declare, and with which to delight his audiences and readers. As a conversationalist and companion, Wilde was stimulating and refreshing.

Good Night Stories

David Meets a Queer Ink Bottle.

Oh, Squeedee! exclaimed David, all excitement, when they jumped off the sea-horses at the bottom of the sea. "Who in the world is that funny-looking creature?"

"Well," laughed the elfin, winking his eye at the creature in question. "Don't you know—but, pshaw, of course not! David, meet Mr. Cuttlefish."

"Cuttlefish is only one of my names," laughed the funny creature, extending his long arm toward David. "Some folks call me Squid. Haven't you ever seen a squid before?"

"Not that I can remember," laughed David, and he had a good look at Mr. Cuttlefish. His funny head looked more like a vase filled with queer flowers than like the head of an animal or a fish.

"If it hadn't been for my ink-bag that time, no telling where you fellows would have found yourselves. I tell you that discoloring the water behind me many times fools my enemies. I don't like to fight, so I run, throwing that inky fluid out behind me, and in this way my pursuer never gets close enough to harm me."

"Sure enough, David!" laughed Squeedee. "I almost forgot to tell you that it's from this very ink-bag which Mr. Cuttlefish has just used that the wise men of your world, David, make their paint called sepia."

"Well, now," laughed Mr. Cuttlefish. "I'm certainly glad to know that, after all, he's some good in this world. Well, you folks come back again whenever you can, and maybe I can show you something else you've never seen, and who knows but what you can tell me something."

And with a merry chuckle Mr. Cuttlefish swam away. Then Squeedee and David rode back to the shore on their sea-horses.

No one likes to play second fiddle, but just the same, it's a wise man who lets some one else sample the home brew first.
