WHERE THE CLOUD OF CIVIL WAR HANGS LOW.

The heavy line marks the boundary of the six-country area which comes under the northern Irish parliament. Sir James Craig says southern forces are massing along the border and he particularly fears for the safety of Londonderry. Culville, near the Armagh-Louth border, near which heavy firing occurred last night, is marked in the map.

Protests Against Treatment.

Kingston, June 6.—(To the Editor): Allow me through your columns to make a protest against the treatment meted out to peaceful holiday-makers Monday evening. A trip was advertised across the lake, the weather was glorious, the sea calm; with a quiet friend I thought it would be a pleasant way to spend the afternoon and we left by the Waubic at 2.15 for Cape Vincent, landed for half an hour, ate an ice-cream, absolutely the only thing worth purchasing in the little village, and returned at 6.55 p.m. Unfortunately no difference was made between the early morning excursion tickets which allowed time for a trip to Watertown, and those for the afternoon boat, an error which should be rectified. Imagine our disgust and dismay when we were first detained on the boat for nearly half an hour, and then, when the boat had to be cleared for another trip, were herded like criminals into a fishy suffocating shed while a female detective, single-handed, searched each woman on board! Those with no parcels, who had not even left the boat, had no chance of passing another official and so escaping the indignity; one lady who showed everything she had bought readily and declared the price said she was mulcted double by the detective, though she had been perfectly candid, and when we got away, hot and exhausted, long after 8 p.m. There were still crowds waiting in the dusk, and we were too upset to finish our pleasant day, as we had planned, at the movies.

If smugglers must receive justice, and rightly so, those evidently parcelless and on a short trip should be passed off the boat first, and the bargain-hunters detained.

Trusting some immediate steps will be taken to prevent the repetition of such a scene.

Yours faithfully,
M. RAYSON,
49 Clergy street.

They are in the most delightful color tones. The Voile is sheer and beautifully fine.
