Jurors these days have opinions all their own. It may be that they come to decisions through the psychic gift or perhaps radio may help them to decide a knotty problem.

A Montreal judge sentenced a former soldier to ten years for burglary and remarked that he was lenient with him as he might have sent him to prison for life. Will anyone hereabouts have the nerve to agree that a ten-year sentence has a shadow of leniency about it?

This same judge congratulated the jury for overlooking the fact that the accused burglar was a soldier and had served overseas. Well that appears to be a natural thing in Quebec province. It is not so long ago since
