Last week Miss Montizamber visited Winnipeg on a trip across Boston - Liverpool - Queenstown Canada and I had the pleasure of June 28 July 26 Aug. 23 Samaria meeting her and of telling her that according to a letter I had just received I could inform her who was responsible for the removal of the Sept. 9 Oct. 7 Cameronia long-lost sword of King Charles the First. Curiously enough it was while she was in Winnipeg that I received a letter from William Trant, of 2400 Assyria Dalhousie street, Victoria, B.C., enclosing copy of letter to the author in which he tells a strange story. British civil service. He is described as being "a fairly tall man, with a big head, big features, and a beard. His characteristic expression denoted benevolence based on an ironic realization of the humanity of human nature. He was forty-six years of age and looked it. He had been for more than twenty years at the Treasury in which organism he had now attained a certain importance. He was a Companion of the Bath." Yet, notwithstanding the fact that this important official made the heads of other departments tremble, so much so that he was known as "the terror of the Treasury," he drew but a very moderate income. In fact he and Mrs. Proback fill up the first chapter by discussing the necessity for more rigid economy in household expenses. If this Treasury official had not had a strong sense of humor the news broken to him in chapter two that he had fallen heir to one hundred thousand pounds would have been too much for him and subsequent events would have landed him in neurasthenia, as it did his good wife, whom he tenderly loved. After we have followed the humorous the royalists by selling them relics of the saddle girths and the conse- windings of this story, we can appreciate Mr. Bennett's moral, "Let he had made from the fragments, peated the story over half a century all pleasantly, or even unpleasantly, When Charles the Second came to the ago, but was called to order by a seedy husbands think twice before July 14 Aug. 11 Sept. 8 ... > Another Scotman, who, like Barie, has won renown in London town, he amuses himself by writing Greenmantle fiction. In the newly published third volume of his "History of the Great War," Mr. Buchan describes the rise of Lloyd-George to the Premiership in December, 1916. Touching on the changing ministry he says, "The linch-pin of the coach was the Prime Minister, and with his accession to the highest place the world became more fully cognisant of one of the most remarkable and potent figures in modern history." Mr. Lloyd George, we are told, "cared little for dogma, and distrusted the Whig code, so far as he troubled himself to understand it. His interest was not in doctrine but in life, and his quick sense of reality made him at heart an opportunist-one who loved the persistency of facts, and was prepared to select, if need be, from the repertory of any party. His elasticity combined with his high political courage, rendered him even in his bitterest campaigns not wholly repugnant to his opponents. He was always human, and had nothing of the dogmatic rigidity, the lean spiritual pride of the elder Liberalism."

A new novel by Sir H. Rider Haggard is always an event of note in the world of fiction. So it will interest the wide circle of novel readers to hear that Messrs. McClelland and Stewart have published "The Virgin of the Sun." In this story, the foundation of which is laid in Plantagenet England, this famous author has revived in a vividly realistic fashion, the legend of a discovery of South America long ere Columbus or
