THE IRISH ELECTIONS.

The returns which have been received so far in the election in South Ireland would seem to indicate a And another reason why grocery clear-cut victory for the party which is in favor of the treaty and which is headed jointly by Michael Collins and Arthur Griffiths. The de Valera party has won a number of seats in the hot beds of Republicanism, but has been defeated in some places where victory was expected, and it seems likely that the complete returns will find the treaty supporters vindicated in their attitude by the majority of the people of the three southern provinces of Ireland. This result is just what has been expected by the more moderate of the Irishmen, for they realized that the bulk of the people affected were desirou of one thing only, a renewal of peaceful conditions in their country, est admirers.
