Kingston: The Limestone City

Toronto Globe.
After Fort Frontenac was captured from the French by the English in 1759, it was deserted, and left in peace and quietness for 25 years except for the coming and going of the few Indian families who lived near. Then came the U. E. Loyalists, under the leadership of Captain Michael Grass, seeking a new home where their allegiance to the British Sovereign might go unchallenged. Once more the wilderness echoed with the sound of the axe and the white man's voice as trees were felled and cabins built in the clearings. But as the newcomers were seeking peace, and not war, the old fort was allowed to crumble and fall into decay. One of its walls and one of its towers remained standing for a long time, and when the Grand Trunk Railway built its line into the city some traces of it were found then. In 1789 barracks were erected on the site of the old fort, but the remains were torn down in 1819, and the troops had temporary quarters in a frame building on the site of the Haymarket, until the present stone barracks were completed—the officers' quarters in 1821, the stone barracks in 1824 and the wooden ones ten years later. These are now known as the Tete de Pont Barracks.
A one-story building of logs on Sydenham street west, which had been used for housing the troops, was for many years known as the Line Barracks, and is still standing, being most substantially built.
The Stone Barracks in Artillery Park was built in 1843, at a cost of more than £3,000, or $15,000. The writer, when a small child, visited cousins in these barracks, and remembers distinctly the feeling of awe and envy of those who were privileged to live in such an unusual and wonderful place. Though later visits to this unique and family of cousins in their apartments in the officers' quarters destroyed much of the glamor and romance of the earlier visit, still one cannot forget how wonderful it seemed to watch the soldiers and horses at drill in the barracks square, and all the other scenes which daily transpire within the walls of the barracks. A unit of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery is always stationed at Artillery Park.
We have already mentioned "The Stone Frigate," the cream-colored barracks built on Point Frederick. Either during the war of 1812, or just afterward, it had its first fortifications built, beginning with a breastwork of logs and earth, with traversing platforms for guns, within which stood a blockhouse, built in 1820. The long row of stone dwellings, to the left of Point Frederick, probably dates from that period. This blockhouse was later replaced by a martello tower.
The War of 1812 did not cause any real hardship in Kingston, nor did it suffer any great loss, but it did show how inadequately the city was fortified, should it ever be the object of a real enemy attack. Accordingly, blockhouses were built about the town, connected by a high stockade. These were two stories high, the upper slightly projecting and built of oak, while the lower one was built of masonry. There were batteries at Mississauga Point; the Market, called the Market Battery, and at Point Frederick. There was also one at Artillery Park, armed with four guns, protected by earthworks, and facing what is now Sydenham street east. The fine Market Battery, in front of where the city buildings now stand, was built in 1848 at a cost of $11,173, and was destroyed to make room for the Kingston & Pembroke Railway. There were two gates in this system of fortification, the north gate, about Bay street, and the picket gate, between Clergy and Sydenham streets. Each was a half-mile from the Market Battery. The only blockhouse now standing is on high ground northeast of Sydenham street. There is also an old blockhouse at Kingston Mills, but the exact date of its erection could not be ascertained.
The tourist, on his first visit to Kingston, is always very curious about the quaint, round towers of stone, which dot the harbor and waterfront. These are the martello towers, so-called, because at Mortello Point in Corsica, a small round tower withstood an immense cannonade in 1794. There are six of these towers—one at Mississauga Point (Macdonald Park), the Shoal Tower, opposite the point where the Market Battery used to stand; one at Fort Frederick, one on Cedar Island and the two most towers at Fort Henry, called the East and West Ditch Towers. These martello towers were built by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who also helped to build Fort Henry.
But by far the most interesting spot around Kingston is Fort Henry, that ancient, venerable-looking pile of grey stone far up on the hill, overlooking the harbor and the city beyond. In 1813, a rude fort of logs, with an embankment, was thrown up at the summit of the hill. A year or two later two lofty towers of rubble work (a rough kind of masonry, in which the stones are irregular in shape and size), rounded at the corners, were added to the primitive buildings, which remained standing until 1826. During 1816-17-18, stores, magazines and ordnance offices and an armory were built outside the fort. Between 1818 and 1820, extensive stone barracks were added, roofed with tin; one of these, within the fort, being 139 feet long. Another building of brown stone, on the site of the advance battery, which afterward replaced it, was 80 feet long, and formed officers' quarters.

This was pulled down in 1841, and the stone sold to build two large houses on Brock street (near Cherry). The present Fort Henry was not begun until 1832, after some years had been spent in quarrying and preparing material, and was occupied in 1835. The main portion was built between 1832 and 1833, of stone quarried from the roadside between Kingston and Gananoque.
While attending school in Kingston it was the writer's privilege to obtain, from a military relative, a pass for herself and a number of college friends into the Fort. Although at that time there was no war, or thought of war, no one was admitted to the Fort without an official pass, as large quantities of ammunition were stored there, but later, during the war, it was used as an internment camp for aliens. We were all excited over the proposed trip, because an aunt, who, as a soldier's wife had once lived in the officers' quarters, had told us of a secret passage, the entrance to which was somewhere within the Fort. Gaily we started out from the city, armed with cameras, for it was a beautiful, bright spring day, determined to find this secret passage, if at all possible. And indeed, we found it, but that story must wait.

WHAT THE CHURCH NEEDS.

Is The Development of a Real Community Spirit.
In Chalmers church on Sunday morning, Rev. Prof. A. J. Johnson, Victoria college, Toronto, gave a very able exposition of the parable of the prodigal, directing attention to the character of "the elder son," whose attitude probably had the effect of driving the younger brother away from home. Prof. Johnson says that what the church needs is to keep the young people with it, go out and bring in those who have gone astray and to develop a community spirit. If the church was doing its duty there would be no need for Kiwanis or Rotary Clubs. In the early days of Christianity it used to be said "how those Christians do love one another." But this could hardly be said today. A lady had told him that when she was across the border she was not in a church more than two or three times till she was made at home and greeted at every turn. In Kingston, she said she could attend a church for months without receiving a greeting. This was not the Christian spirit, Prof. Johnson said.

What Does "B" Stand For.

Indian Agent G. M. Campbell left at the Post, Deseronto, some oats taken from a fifteen acre field owned by Nicholas Hill, Tyendinaga Reserve. The oats were five feet one inch long and each leaf had the letter "B" on it. As will be remembered this mysterious letter appeared on the oats prior to the cessation of the late war at which time it was said to denote a victory for British arms. What does it mean now? Perhaps a bountiful or bumper crop of oats.

A man often has more respect for his servant than his servant has for him.

BOY SCOUTS AT CHURCH.

Attended St. George's for the Sunday Morning Service.

St. George's troop of Boy Scouts made a fine appearance when they paraded to St. George's cathedral on Sunday morning under the command of Assistant Scoutmaster Percy Hill and Patrol Leader Innes Fraser. The big silk scout flag, with its red St. George's cross, the gift of the officers of the P.C.H.A., was borne by Scout FitzGerald. The main body of the scouts sat in the battery gallery, but the choir was brightened by the presence of a number of its members in the khaki and red uniform of the scouts, and during the offertory they sang, "Our Chorus." Scout Arnold Fair taking the solo in splendid voice. Major the Rev. W. E. Kidd, M.C., under whose care the troop has reached its present state of efficiency, preached a practical sermon, drawing his lesson from the story of Joseph.

Again Grand Master.

So far as the election of officers for the Grand Masonic Lodge of Ontario is concerned, M.W. Bro. W. N. Ponton, K.C., Belleville, will be returned my acclamation another year as grand master. A like honor will be accorded to W. J. Drope, Grimsby, the assistant grand master, and M. W. Bro. E. T. Malone, K.C., will be continued in office as grand-treasurer. Grand Secretary W. M. Logan will also be unopposed.

Stole Potatoes From Penitentiary.

A resident of the city when passing the penitentiary farm during a dark night last week was surprised and yet amused to note several dark figures in on the penitentiary farm ground digging vegetables for all they were worth. A wagon on the roadside indicated their manner of carrying away the loot. Whether they were men desirous of getting back the result of years of toil is not known.
