Folks Back Home By Robert Quillen

Uncle Gus chuckled as he emptied and refilled his blackened corn-cob pipe. "The' was a trav'lin' man here 'while ago," said he. "Tryin' to sell me a bill o' goods an' givin' me his opin'ion o' small towns. He said he'd a right 'futher be deat than a-livin' here. I didn't say nothin', knowin' the utility o' arguin' with them kind, but he kind o' tickled me. In New York, where he stays the' is lots o' folks, but he don't care nothin' about 'em. The' is lots o' fine buildings, but he don't notice 'em. The' is big libraries an' picture galleries, an' things like that, but he prob'ly ain't been inside 'em. He says he loves New York, but it takes two to do proper lovin'. I'll bet New York don't love him none. Now, me, if I was to drop dead, the' would be mo' excitement than a circus. Ever'body would feel kind o' sorry an' say what a good feller I was an' how the town will miss me; but if 'that trav'lin' man was to drop dead in his town, the most anybody would say would be, 'I wonder who that gink was layin' there.' The' ain't nothin' in the world worth much exceptin' friends, an' the smallest town in the country has got mo' o' 'em than the biggest one."

Disgrace is society's best weapon. Men who could violate a moral law without hurt of conscience will walk in paths of virtue to avoid public contempt. Standards have lost their authority because public opinion has become tolerant of rottenness. More law cannot keep men decent. Teach a boy that honesty is the best policy and you will make him prudent; teach him that dishonesty is disgraceful and you make him honest. Neither boy nor man is easily persuaded to do a thing that will earn him the scorn of his fellows.

If all men should turn their backs to one who patronizes a bootlegger, how long would bootleggers have patrons? If society should ostracize the man who told a lie back in 1896, who would dare to lie? If profiteering in patriotism caused all men's doors to close in the profiteer's face, would the world see his like again. Our standards are pretty things, but they avail little because they are not backed by the threat of public scorn.

Homes. Of two men, one of whom wears shoes and one of whom goes barefoot winter and summer, which has the greater interest in the price of leather? Of two men, one of whom has three children and one of whom has none, which has the greater interest in the selection of efficient teachers for the public schools? Of two men, one of whom owns a house and lot and one of whom has no possession save those carried in his pockets, which is more prone to run after strange political 'isms and join with the mob in crying: "Down with everything a foot high?" The man who has much to lose is a friend of the established order. The man who has nothing to lose and much to gain by revolution is ripe for harvest by the radicals. "Let me have men about me who are fat." Those who have possessions—who have some bit of property on which to fix their affections—these are the conservatives. These are the men who think of government as "we"—who resent and punish the extravagance of public servants—who demand order and decency and peace. On these governments lean for support, and by these governments is maintained. Wherefore it follows that government could serve itself well and insure its future by encouraging its citizens to build homes—by lending them the money with which to build. For a home-owner and a planter of trees is fixed in his orb. He is a solid citizen. Without stress and storm, he may lack the fire to produce the work of genius; but he never will make a bomb or counsel reform by means of destruction.

The Girl Across the Street.

The girl across the street came over at lunch time Wednesday to confide again in Daughter. Another of the mysterious love letters had reached her Tuesday, typewritten and unsigned, and pride so far triumphed over discretion as to persuade her to show it to the butcher boy when he called in the evening. The butcher boy was worth. "It's that Lawyer Davis," he growled. "The ole bald-headed skink! I know it's him, because he's the only man in town that's got a typewriter and ain't married, and he's the only one can use high-fatutin' language. I'm a-goin' to bust him, that's what I'm a-goin' to do."

"You'll do nothing of the kind, Hiram Fetchit," cried the girl; but her tone of voice was not convincing.

Willie Willis. Little Willie Willis has discovered the secret of philosophy. When the preacher called Tuesday and asked him why he preferred playing with good little boys rather than bad ones he replied: "Because I can tick nearly all of the good ones."

What the Press Agents Say About Coming Attractions

At the Allen.
Wanda Hawley and T. Roy Barnes as a young married couple offer a treat at the Allen Theatre to-day, Tuesday and Wednesday in "Too Much Wife," a comedy-drama and one of the best things of its kind ever seen on the screen. It's a long story when you try to write it, but it reels along at the limit of speed with a laugh to mark off every couple of revolutions. Miss Hawley, as a fond little bride, eager to insure the marital happiness of herself and her bridegroom, takes advice from her "masterful" mother, but also, privately, from her hen-pecked father. Her effort to reconcile and act on both conflicting counsels makes the story—one you'll like. Lorna Moon had an imagination, you'll admit, to conceive the startling results that grow out of the simple situation with which she started, yet there is nothing forced or too improbable.

JUMPS FROM PRISON TRAIN

Walter Griffith, the negro convict who escaped from a train near Burwash on Sunday morning, was also known as "Kid" Griffith, was thirty-one years of age and gave his occupation as a railroad porter. The following description appears in his records at the penitentiary: Weight, 140 pounds, height, 5 feet 7 1/2 inches, complexion, mulatto, eyes dark brown, hair black, scar on his forehead over his right eye and a scar on his left breast. He was born in Windsor, and his wife, a white woman, resides in Montreal.

No further information had been received by Warden Ponsford up to a late hour on Monday afternoon. The case was in charge of Inspector Gilbert Smith, Ottawa, with Chief Keeper Matt Walsh, second in command. It is believed that the latter along with Guard Leo Sullivan are now conducting the chase in the north country. Three men were constantly on duty in the cars and it is a matter of considerable wonderment that the desperado was able to make good his escape under such supervision.

A Cordial Invitation To Disease

This is an apt description of Constipation. It's an unnatural condition to begin with—but it's dangerous because it leads to indigestion, fills the system with poisons, brings on anaemia. You don't need a purgative, you don't want to weaken the system by a harsh-gripping medicine—what you need is mild, natural stimulant to the bowels. You get just what you need in Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which tone up the liver, restore the bowels to perfect action and positively end constipation. You'll feel tip top after regulating your system with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Good for young and old—a real family medicine. 25c. all dealers, or The Catarrhose Co., Montreal.
