A FLOCK OF HENS ESCAPED FROM MARKET

Owner Had a Lively Time Rounding Up Birds on Saturday.

How would you like the job of catching a flock of hens on a crowded thoroughfare? On Saturday afternoon, while the market was in full blast, and Brock street congested with traffic, a flock of hens escaped from a farmer's rig and gave the owner the chase of his life. Two other men took up the chase, and for the crowd it was very amusing. Up and down Brock street in and out among cars and vehicles, the birds made their way and they had an easy time of it keeping ahead of their pursuers, but eventually the hens ran into an office, and were rounded up, as the doors were well guarded, and they were soon back in the farmer's wagon.

SHAVED IN THE DARK.

Local Barber Slipped the Whiskers When the Lights Failed. Minor trouble in the lighting circuit between Sydenham and Montreal streets on Princess street, plunged the stores in that block into darkness for a short time early on Saturday evening. One barber claimed on Monday morning that, although he had shaved men while he was blindfolded, it was the first time that he had ever shaved a man in the dark. He carried it on successfully, too.

Had a Regular Houseful.

Rez Snelgrove had a full house on Saturday evening although he wasn't playing poker. Every seat and available space, even the orchestra pit, was filled at the Grand Opera House when "Here She Comes" was the attraction. The laughter could be heard out on the street which is as good a recommendation as Rex needs for the popularity of the farce.

"Our agricultural settlers must be carefully selected in the country of origin, wisely directed on arrival so that they will not drift into the ranks of the unemployed in our cities, and so placed on the land that they may become substantial citizens of the dominion."—RIGHT HON. MACKENZIE KING.
