DEATH OF J. L. WHITING CAME AS GREAT SHOCK

To Those Present in the Judge's Chambers When He Expired.

The suddenness of the death of the late J. L. Whiting came as a great shock to those who were in the Judge's chambers at the court house where he passed away Friday afternoon. Mr. Whiting was acting for the Crown in a case in which a will in the Quinn estate, Sydenham, was being disputed. Two and a half hours' evidence had been taken in the morning and the court resumed at 2 o'clock. Mr. Whiting had, following his custom of not taking a noon day meal, spent the noon hour in an office at the court house, and shortly before his death was taking notes from the cross-examination being conducted by A. B. Cunningham. Mr. Whiting passed without a word, only a gasping sound attracting the attention of the courtroom. With a slight stretch of his arms he became unconscious before anyone could reach him.

There were a large number of witnesses being heard during the case and the room was quite warm in the morning but Mr. Whiting had not been exerting himself particularly. During the morning Mr. Whiting had conducted his case in his usual keen and concise manner.

When the court opened at 2 o'clock Mr. Whiting appeared in his usual good health. A few minutes before his death he was taking a keen interest in some evidence being elicited from a witness by Mr. Cunningham and was noticed making a note of it.

Mr. Whiting was sitting beside J. B. Walkem, K.C., who was first to notice the gasp given by his friend. He immediately arose and called to Dr. Sargent. Mr. Whiting was lifted upon the long table and further medical assistance was summoned. His pulse grew weaker and in three or four minutes he was dead.

Word had been sent to Mrs. Whiting that her husband had been taken ill, and she was met by Mr. Walkem hurrying to the court house. The latter informed her that the end had come, and she was conveyed to her home by Mr. Walkem and County Registrar Gibson.

The late Mr. Whiting had been troubled with organic heart disease for some time and was fessed to take things easy.

The death came with such a shock to those in the room, who were mostly residents of Sydenham, that one of the ladies fainted. The case was adjourned indefinitely by Judge Lavell. Mr. Whiting was actively engaged in all local courts till the last. He frequently appeared in police court as crown-attorney and city solicitor, and his last police court case was that of bigamy on which the accused last Saturday was sent to penitentiary for two years. He also had charge of the Upton-Bryant cases in their initial stages.

Mr. Whiting knew that he was liable to be seized with a sudden attack of heart trouble any time, and was therefore very careful of himself during the past two years.

Hon. William Harty and James Redden were Mr. Whiting's oldest friends and they remained pals to the last. The old political days had drawn these three very closely together, and their friendship was maintained all through the years in regular social intercourse in their homes. The trio has now been broken.

The flags on the city buildings and the court house are flying at half-mast out of respect to the memory of the deceased veteran lawyer.

CO-OPERATION IN DAIRYING

Meeting of the County Cheese Men Held in the City on Friday.

John Beatty, president of Ontario Dairy Co-operative Products Limited, Toronto, and Edward Stonehouse, provincial secretary-treasurer, were in the city on Friday to address a meeting of cheese factory men and organize a county committee to represent the company with a view to pledging all factories to operate under the new sales organization. They were met by G. G. Publow, chief dairy inspector for Eastern Ontario, and outlined their plans at the agricultural hall, Market street.

"Our object is to obtain control of seventy-five per cent. of the product of the Ontario cheese factories," said Mr. Stonehouse, "and sell it co-operatively, thus eliminating the expense that falls upon the individual factories under the present system. By adoption of such a course there will be a big saving to the patrons. Our system is very simple. Under it, no stock certificates are sold. We work on the existing factory basis, but require all factories that sell through us to enter a three-year contract agreeing to sell their entire output through the company. In this way we will be in a position to handle factory supplies, and experience shows that there has been a reduction from fifteen to two per cent. in costs. I have been many years in the dairy business, and I think the time has arrived when the factory must give more concern to having the goods meet the consumers' wishes. By eliminating the speculators we will have the entire control of the marketing of our products."

"The charter for our company was issued by the Ontario government and Hon. Manning Doherty is behind us. We have had some obstacles to encounter owing to the diversity of the factory organizations, but feel that with education all these will be overcome."

Mr. Publow is a strong supporter of the co-operative idea in the marketing of Ontario's cheese output. He is chiefly responsible for the high state of efficiency of the cheese makers and the uniformly splendid quality of our cheese. This year, he reports that there has not been one prosecution in Ontario for the adulteration of milk by farmers selling to cheese factories and dairies, and he attributed this fact to the operation of the Dairy Standards Act, put into force this year by Hon. Manning Doherty. Had this act not been put into operation, there would have been from fifty to one hundred prosecutions in the courts. Although cheese production started slowly this year, there will be a good average output, and the returns to the farmers will be good. Some factories are paying better prices today than some dairies and creameries. Of course, it is well to have different channels open to farmers. Much depends upon location, such as proximity to cities and towns, and transportation facilities. When the prices of one product are down, the farmer is able to turn to what will bring him the greatest return so that in the end he loses nothing. There are many factories entering into dairy business, but he finds that the cheese factory is dependable and a good thing for the farmer. The bulk of Canada's cheese is produced right in eastern Ontario and in which is peculiarly adapted to dairy farming. There is not the local population there as in western Ontario to consume the surplus milk, cream and butter and cheesemaking is an industry that must be preserved. Much can be done to increase the returns to the factory patrons and the Ontario government is behind all efforts to help co-operation.

At the conclusion of the discussion the question of the appointment of a committee for Frontenac county was taken up, and nominations made of persons in sympathy with the
