Montreal Woman Finds Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Montreal, Quebec.—"I was a sufferer for three years, not able to do my housework. My husband was discouraged, for I was no better and had had the doctor all this time and nothing helped me. I was always sleepy, had no appetite and suffered with my left side. My mother in England recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because it had helped my sister, so I have been taking it. I am now able to do my housework and I can not praise your medicine too highly as I have great hopes for the future. I will tell anyone who writes to me what good it has done me."—Mrs. E. Mason, St. Henry P. O., Montreal.

THE EARLIEST RECORD OF OSGOODE'S WORK

Is a Sitting of the Kingston Court About the Year 1792.

"Bystander" has the following in the Toronto Globe: The somewhat drastic report of the Civil Service Commission on the official desizens of the building known as Osgoode Hall will be a historic production if it gives effect to its recommendations. Pending the threatened revolution, it is worth while to revert to the beginning of the legal system of this province, and the provision of a home both for the service and the superior courts.

Osgoode Hall, as a building, is one of the finest classic models in Toronto. The architect was the late Mr. Storm, and the edifice is the earliest of several public buildings in Toronto that are collectively his monument. The building is appropriately named after Hon. William Osgoode, the first Chief Justice of Upper Canada after it was set apart in 1791. Born in England, he had practiced 12 years in the English courts before he was appointed chief justice of the new province, contemporaneously with the appointment of Col. John Simcoe to its lieutenant-governorship. At the first parliament, which met at Niagara in 1792, the jurisdiction of the chief justice was defined as extending from Niagara to Cornwall, within which limits were the settlements of the United Empire Loyalists. The earliest existing record of Osgoode's judicial work is that of the sitting of the Kingston "Court of Oyer, and Terminer," in which his associates were Hon. Richard Cartwright and Hon. Hector McLeod of the Common Pleas. His last criminal court sitting in Upper Canada was at Cornwall in 1794, for after only a few months' tenure of the chief justiceship of Upper Canada he was transferred to the then more important and more difficult position of chief justice of Lower Canada.

Before his retirement from the province he delivered, in a charge to the grand jury, a strong protest against negro slavery, an institution which had already obtained a foothold through the influx of slaveholders among the refugees from the revolted colonies. The result of this address was the enactment by the legislature of Upper Canada, in 1793, of a law abolishing slavery, a whole generation before it was abolished by the British parliament.

Chief Justice Osgoode retired to England in 1801 and died there in 1824. There hangs in Osgoode Hall a fine portrait of him by Berthon, painted from a portrait obtained by Lord Dufferin from Lieutenant-Governor Simcoe's grandson.

The Jewish New Year. Two hundred blasts on the Shofar or sheep's horn signalled the beginning of the Jewish New Year which was observed by local Jews with special services by Rabbi Berosove in the synagogue. From sundown Friday night until Sunday orthodox Jews throughout the city and surrounding district suspended all occupation. Stores were closed and work ceased while the Israelites surveyed the shortcomings of the past year and contemplated the opportunities of the future.

Did You Ever Stop to Think.

That you must exchange smiles for happiness. That your city extends a hearty welcome to those seeking health, contentment and prosperity. That men engaged in the real estate business are city-builders. That property well sold is helpful to a community.

That the asset of the greatest value to a real estate concern is the goodwill of the community, earned by honesty of the concern. That the seller of property expects a fair price for that which he sells.

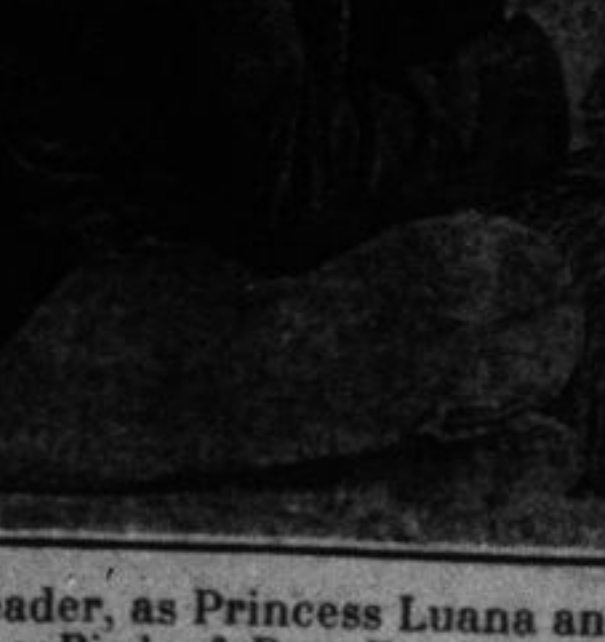

That the buyer wants full value for his investment. That a real-estate concern, with proper and efficient management, acts as agent for both buyer and seller.

That the real estate concern, with proper and efficient management, is a big factor in community development and up-building and can be counted on to do its full duty in every civic endeavor.
