THE DARE-DEVIL ACT OF PARACHUTE JUMPER

Prof. C. A. Farley Had Narrow Escapes From Death in Quebec City.

"When is the aeroplane going up?" "Have you seen it yet?" "Common, fellows, there she is." "Does a man jump out of that, away up there?" "Gee, I wonder where he'll land." These and hundreds of similar remarks might have been heard at any time, at any place, and from thousands of throats, young and old, during the period of the industrial exhibition last week. It would appear then that the aeroplane is still as fascinating as ever to the average person, and that the time has not yet arrived when the feats of aviators are commonplace affairs.

Even more wonderful is the dare-devil act of the parachute jumper, especially when a racing plane, hundreds of feet in the air, is the starting point for the death-defying leap through space. Prof. C. A. Farley, who appeared in this thrilling act during fair week, is one of the most daring of these men who play around with the Grim Reaper, and he has only escaped the great and last adventure by hair-breadths many times during his fifteen years of this stuff. Only a few days ago, for instance, in Quebec City, he had narrow escapes on two of his acts there. On one occasion after jumping from a height of 2,000 feet, his parachute failed to open until within only 200 feet of the ground, and he was almost a dead man even before this happened, proving the well-known fact that the hard ground isn't the only thing to be reckoned with in a fall through the air. Farley's arm was badly injured, but he made his next jump on schedule time as though nothing had happened—only to land amidst high voltage Hydro wires forty feet from the ground. On both occasions his escape was nothing short of a miracle, and the stunt was extremely exciting, if not even hair-raising, for the thousands of watchers standing safely on terra firma.

Confident that almost anything would be more soul-satisfying and exciting than listening to the eternal babble of "Aw, gimme a scribbler, mister" in front of the branch office of this paper in the exhibition building, a Whig reporter accepted an invitation to make a flight in the "plane" on Saturday afternoon, through the courtesy of F. Clow, one of the fair officials, and Capt. W. M. Emery, the pilot of the machine.

The start was made late in the afternoon, as proper aeroplane "gas" was expected to be shipped into the city from Ottawa, and the pilot was not exactly in love with the ordinary gasoline common for motor car use. However, the latter had to be used in the end, and after some spluttering protests by the twin-four engine, the big machine was coaxed into starting.

The sensations experienced during the flight are hard to describe, though it is hardly necessary to mention that Prof. Farley is entirely welcome to his job of "jumping." It may look easy from the ground looking up, but from the top looking down—"nothin' doin'." Farley, after unstrapping the parachute from the under-carriage of the plane, climbs out on the wing and makes his leap earthward in the opposite direction from which the plane is travelling. Both leaps on Saturday were made from 1,800 feet.

Naturally, while up in the air, a splendid view of the city and surrounding country is obtained, although the hazy weather of Saturday made long-distance views impossible. The city appears like a toy village, and much smaller than might be imagined. From the outer station to Macdonald Park appears to be only a few steps, while the extent of "Bob" Bushell's fair is almost negligible. The big city water-tower tapers on the appearance of an inverted thimble, while the streets all look alike, paved or unpaved.

Even while watching the ground, there is practically no sensation of motion, and the machine appears to be stationary in the air. Of course, when close to the ground, there is no trouble about noticing the speed travelled, nor when the engine is shut off, when the scribe, at least, felt as if his stomach desired to peek at the scenery through his throat.

Both Capt. Emery and Prof. Farley are very likeable young men, and neither of them is self-conscious concerning his exploits in the city. The latter expects to be in the city next year for the "Bigger and Better than Ever" fair, and told the Whig scribe that he would do a twin-parachute stunt. The aviators left for Montreal on Sunday morning.

Queen's Extra Mural Registration.
The registration in Queen's extra mural courses which open this week shows a further increase. Already about one hundred new students have been added to the already extensive lists of students taking this opportunity provided for the extension of their studies. The growth of the summer school has also aided greatly in boosting the attendance.

Nipped by Frost.
There have been several minor visits of Jack Frost lately, and many of the trees in the city show the effect of "nips."

MILITARY ADDRESS GIVEN

Before Kiwanis Club by Col. T. V. Anderson, Royal Military College.

"The military profession of Canada" was the subject of a most interesting address delivered by Col. T. V. Anderson, D.S.O., P.S.T., general staff officer of the Royal Military College, at the weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club held in the Frontenac Hotel on Monday evening.

Col. Anderson is a graduate of the R.M.C., and performed distinguished service in France during the late world war, and his treatment of his subject was therefore listened to with the keenest attention. It is one that few people without military experience are conversant with, and the members of the Kiwanis Club appreciated the privilege of hearing an authority so well known as Col. Anderson whose military career began in Kingston.

"The military profession is one about which few Canadians think at all and yet it is the one upon which the safety of the people, in the final analysis, mainly depends," said the speaker in opening his address. He dealt with the composition of the two branches of Canada's defence force, the permanent and nonpermanent, showing the relation one to the other and their respective duties. The permanent force officers are employees of the government and as such are expected to provide the government with expert advice upon matters relating to defence. For this purpose they are required to study every phase of their subject and one of the most vital requirements is that their information be kept up to date. Mobilization was dealt with, and it was here that the permanent force was called upon to do important work as all officers and permanent units became instructors for divisions that eventually were to do the actual fighting.

As both officers and men had to have training for their duties in order to become efficient the work had to be carried on in peace time. Schools of instruction are provided for in the Militia Act and the permanent force officers constitute the schools. It is therefore necessary that they be able to instruct the militia officers, and upon mobilization train them in their duties. The professional officers must study the higher branches of the service in order to be able to teach. The subjects are not easy to learn as they consist of the principles involved in past campaigns.

The duties of commanders required a good working knowledge of every branch of the service. These were outlined by Col. Anderson who showed how important it was that the dashing leader in war should get the details in peace time. The military profession of today, and of the future, requires men of more than average ability, said the speaker in conclusion.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Col. Anderson by W. Y. Mills and seconded by Dr. Edward Ryan. Dr. Ryan said that he was proud of the fact that the days of division between permanent force officers and the civilians had gone by.

President Noble Steacy presided and a splendid musical programme was put on by Garnet Lockett.

During the roll call the following guests were introduced: Col. T. V. Anderson, Gen. F. W. Hill, A. A. and Q.M.G., M.D. No. 3, Clarence Berry, Lt.-Col. Scroggie, H. Moore.

Percy Borland, manager of the Bank of Toronto, and popular secretary of the club, was the booster. He received a most hearty Kiwanis rocket. While not many years a resident of the city Percy has become a prominent figure in numerous civic activities and his work is always marked by efficiency and despatch that have won him an enviable place in the confidence of the business and professional men of the city. In addition to placing a useful memorandum book at the plate of each guest and member, he provided three valuable prizes that were won by Joe Hanley, L. J. Austin and M. G. Johnston.

President Noble Steacy called upon the classification committee for its report and R. J. Gardiner and L. C. Lockett responded. It was shown that many classes were yet to be represented and the matter was passed over to the executive committee for action.

Frank Hoag, delegate at the Windsor convention gave an interesting report on the proceedings there. Two hundred and fifty delegates were in attendance and at the election of officers Stewart Delaronde, of Ottawa, was elected lieutenant-governor of the central district in which Kingston is situated. The next place of meeting will be Quebec city.

Coal Arriving.
The C. P. R. brought in ten cars of soft coal and hard coal on Monday, while the G. T. R. brought four cars of soft coal for Crawford and Sowards. The movement has started and prices are tumbling in consequence. The schooners Horace Taber and St. Louis will leave for Oswego as soon as they can get ready, the crews having been pretty well made up.

Did You Ever Stop to Think.
That your city offers great advantages to both producers and buyers. That you should do everything you can to advance the business interests of your city. That you should show the right spirit, boost your city all the time. That it sometimes happens that in some stores in some cities, you will find a surly clerk, a conceited clerk or a sassy clerk. They always help to make business for some store, other than the one they are working in.

That to succeed you have to serve. To reap the harvest of success and a quick turnover of your merchandise, means you have to sow the seeds of effort. Do it by advertising, and with the obliging clerk, the one who believes in giving the customer service, the clerk who can smile and make the customer feel he is favoring your store with his order. Some grouchy clerks act as though they were doing a great favor to a customer when they condescend to let them buy. The buying public can get along without you, but can you get along without them?
