What the Press Agents Say About Coming Attractions

BIG DRAMATIC MOMENTS IN "MASQUERADE" AS FILM

Betrayed by a scar, exposed by his love for music, stripped of his disguise by his failure to recognize the secretary of the man he was supposed to be, he found himself verging on the brink of ruin. The reputation of one of England's oldest and most respected families was at stake—the honor of a man who had made a great name for himself and then dissipated his prestige.

This is the situation that faced John Loder in the climax of "The Masquerade" at the Allen theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, which marks one of the most unusual and gripping stories that has ever been translated to the screen.

In juxtaposition to the strong physical resemblance of two men, a resemblance so strong that the wife of one is unable to tell them apart even after close scrutiny, is an even stronger contrast of tastes and traits. One man has allowed poison to seep his soul, to kill the love of music and everything beautiful. The other remains a yearning for the hours at the piano, a craving for intellectual companionship and a longing for home and family.

In the contrast of these two men there has been evolved a plot that is stranger than "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Richard Walton Tully, making his debut as a motion picture producer after many successful ventures on the speaking stage, is the man who visualized the possibilities of this story and is starring Guy Bates Post in it. Mr. Post has to his credit more than three thousand appearances on the stage in the dual role he creates in the picture.

OCTOBER PICTURES.

The month of October will be a banner month for moving picture followers in Kingston. The Strand theatre will offer in that period some of the best attractions it has had for many a day. For instance commencing Monday Wallace Reid in "The Dictator" will be the feature and the following Monday will open a return engagement of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," in which Rodolph Valentino and Alice Terry made their names.

Then will come Gloria Swanson in "Her Glided Cargo," another of "The Big 41." Paramount pictures issued this season. Thomas Meighan and Theodore Roberts will come along in "If You Believe It, It's So" then Larry Semon in "A Pair of Kings" will make hundreds laugh.

"Foolish Wives," the most talked of picture of the year will be shown in The Strand Theatre during October. Dorothy Dalton will come in "The Siren Call," a picture released only a short time ago. Clara Kimball Young, another favorite with Kingstonians will be here in "Hands of Nora." All during October "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" as well as "The Leather Pushers," will be strong feature attractions at the Strand Theatre.

Stories of the Theatre.

by "Rex"

One time, many years ago I happened to be appearing with a "Barnstorming" Fly-By-Night company, and we got a long way from New York and the show went on the rocks. With no money on hand the manager decided to close the show. That night we got a message from the town that we were billed to appear in the following night, that the house was "Sold Out" an eight hundred dollar advance sale—Whee. We raked and

Zara Clinton, beloved from coast to coast, needs no introduction to Kingston and will renew her acquaintance with her host of admirers through the medium of F. scraped and borrowed and pawned, and at last got enough for railroad fare over. We arrived at the station about three in the morning, and there a bus met us to drive us the two miles to town. The manager climbed up with the driver. We were all feeling pretty good, I can tell you. The manager started to enthuse on the scenery (what he could see of it) and noticing a beautiful red glow in the east remarked "What a Glorious Sun Rise." Flipping his team the bus driver remarked "Sun Rise H—, that's the opera house aburning down."

A very important road show manager (in his own estimation) rushed into the theatre of a little hick town, where his company was appearing that night, and finding a man pushing peanut hulls out with a broom, approached him and the following conversation took place—

Manager: "Where is the stage carpenter?"
He of the broom—"I be."
Manager—"Well, where is the property man?"
He of the broom—"That's I am."
Manager—"And the master electrician?"
He of the broom—"Me."

Manager—"Good heavens man, you can't do all these things and give my company the service they require. I'll speak to the manager of the theatre. Where is he?"
He of the broom—"Right here."
Manager—"What?"
He of the broom—"Yes sure, everything there is around here, I am. Anything I ain't—isn't—"

Some years ago, when Lincoln Carter's "The Flaming Arrow" was at its height a funny thing happened. In the last act there is a battle between soldiers and Indians. On both sides of the "war" a number of extras or supers were used. The Indians were all extras, fellows from the local town. One night the company arrived so late it was impossible to give the "Indians" a rehearsal, but the man in charge of the extras told them—"Listen, you fellows, when this curtain goes up you are standing here, and you here and you there, etc., etc. When the shooting starts, you fellows shoot and every now and then one of you drop dead. The scene lasts till all the Indians are supposed to be dead." The time came, and it seems that each extra had quietly made up his mind to end his acting as soon as possible, and had decided to drop dead as soon as possible. Imagine the surprise of the audience, when as the first and only shot was fired, all the Indians toppled over dead. It was such a shock to the "Captains" of the soldiers that he forgot himself and yelled—"Some shooting!"

Joe Kelly tells this one. An elderly spinster lady speaking to her little nephew, asked him what he had been doing all afternoon, and he decided to drop dead as soon as possible. Imagine the surprise of the audience, when as the first and only shot was fired, all the Indians toppled over dead. It was such a shock to the "Captains" of the soldiers that he forgot himself and yelled—"Some shooting!"

SESSIONS ARE CONTINUED

By International Alliance of Theatrical Employees Friday and Saturday.

The sessions of the International Alliance of Theatrical Employees were continued on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning. Various reports were received which showed the local district to be very strong financially.

The report of the general secretary-treasurer showed a very encouraging review of the year's work and the entire recommendations were turned over to a special committee for action. The reports from the various locals of the districts showed the federation to be in splendid condition and the working agreements between the employees and the managers most satisfactory. The constitution committee has been instructed to bring the by-laws of the organization up to date and several revisions are to be made. The resolutions committee brought in several matters having to do with the internal workings of the order and to improve the present situation. The financial statement showed that several hundreds of dollars are in the district treasury as a surplus. Vice-President Corbett, Toronto, presided at the business sessions.

Addresses were delivered by International President Shay. New York city, and by other representatives from New York. The speech-making had to do with the business matters of the organization, and practical illustrations were given of the various situations that other locals had gone through.

P. J. Ryan, Montreal, was unanimously re-elected general secretary-treasurer of the 11th District, and many complimentary tributes were paid to his ability and sterling qualities. A special session was held on Friday evening in the Trades and Labor hall owing to the large amount of work before the convention. The delegates and officials of the organization expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the hospitality and co-operation shown to them in this city by the members of the local union, the mayor and civic officials, and many other citizens. During the stay of the delegates the local theatres have been thrown open to the visitors and this courteous act by the theatre managers of the city has been greatly appreciated. The officials and delegates extended their sincere thanks to Mayor Corbett and the city council for allowing their use of Ontario Hall for the convention sessions.

On Saturday afternoon an entertainment programme has been provided for the visitors, which includes an auto drive around the city, a visit to the Royal Military College and other places of interest in the city and district. Later in the afternoon the party will proceed to Battersa for dinner. The visitors are delighted with the Limestone City and its citizens and they all state that they have had a splendid time here. NOT LIKELY TO FAIL.

5,000 Ex-service Men Still in Canadian Hospitals.

Ottawa, Sept. 30.—That there were nearly 5,000 ex-service men still in Canadian hospitals and that it was not expected this number would very materially decrease owing to the fact that approximately 3,000 of them were either mentally affected or suffering from tuberculosis and others practically incurable complaints as a result of the great war, was one of the statements made to the inaugural supper of the season of the Dominion Methodist church Men's Association, by Major N. F. Parkinson, deputy minister of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment in an interesting address in which he reviewed the work of his department. Major Parkinson also stated that 56,000 ex-service men had completed courses of vocational training. There were also 70,000 pensions being paid at the present time to disabled ex-service men and to dependents.

DEMOCRATIC LEADER CRITICIZES VICEROY

He Says That Action on Indian Princes' Press Bill Was Unwise.

London, Sept. 30.—The latest development in what is styled a constitutional crisis arising out of the action of the Viceroy, Lord Reading, with relation to the press bill for the protection of Indian princes, according to a Reuter despatch from Simla, India, is a statement by the leader of the Democratic party in the Legislative Assembly, terming the Viceroy's action unwise and unjustified, and declaring that this constitutional episode showed that there had been too optimistic with regard to the extent and character of the proposed reforms in India.

The Democratic party leader's statement was with reference to the Viceroy's recommendation on September 25th that the bill to protect Indian princes against seditious statements in the press, which was rejected by the Legislative Assembly, should be re-introduced in the Council of State. The leader in question deprecated the extraordinary haste shown for the enactment of the bill, which he said was unintelligible. The Viceroy's action, though constitutional, he said, ought not to have been taken until other avenues in connection with the matter had been exhausted.

The Democratic party leader contended that the Viceroy's action had not, first, that the government could pledge itself to legislation without consulting the legislature, and impose its will upon it without justifying the necessity thereof, and secondly, that even those who believe in the reality of the reforms were now obliged to own to having been too sanguine regarding the extent and character of the reforms.
