LAYS WORRY ASIDE

"Uncle Jim" Unaffected by Cares of the Day.

"Squatter" in New York City Has Permanent Home and All His Modest Needs Supplied.

In New York, where the high-cost-of-living specter haunts the millions and some millionaires, possession by a penniless man of health, happiness and a home on Riverside drive, with acres of front lawn, is perhaps an accomplishment without precedent. Yet for 22 years, "Uncle Jim" Miller, Manhattan's oldest, if not only the "squatter," has enjoyed these things as a result of...

"Just believe in God." Uncle Jim is a negro who, on February 10, entered upon his seventy-third year, and is today smilingly confident that he will live beyond the century mark without the loss of his health or physical activity. His theory is that God will take care of anyone who trusts Him, although he does not quite carry this belief to the point of a lily-of-the-field existence, and admits that his health has been and will be maintained by his physical efforts in gathering, cutting and sawing wood for his winter fires, doing his own washing and cooking and otherwise keeping his house in order.

In 1900, when what is now his front lawn was marsh land almost on a level with the Hudson river, "Uncle Jim" was employed by a contractor named Conway as one of a number of laborers who were to fill in the marshes lying along the Hudson's east bank. He was provided with boards for a little "shack" which he built with its back against a huge boulder. Then he aided in filling in what is now his front yard. When the work was completed and "Uncle Jim" having staked his claim, as he says, decided to "squatter" there indefinitely.

Conway said it was all right with him, and since then various owners of the property have given tacit consent to his remaining. As his lawn is filled-in land, hardly suitable for the foundations of houses, the old "squatter" feels secure in his possession. The one-room shack is now strengthened on the river side by sheets of tin which resist the winter blasts. Within is a stove, some cooking and eating utensils and a cot, but "Uncle Jim" spends most of his time outdoors. From the Hudson he obtains crabs and fish for his meals, and an odd job now and then brings sufficient change with which to buy bread, coffee and tobacco.

"When I came here," said "Uncle Jim," "this was all a wilderness. I always liked to rough it, and I never in my life worried about anything. I'm Sappy and never was sick a day. I get all I need, and this is the kind of life I like—so why shouldn't I be thankful?"

"I don't want any better home than this, and I don't need any more money to live as I do here. I want to be outdoors all the time. At night I read a little by lamplight. I never wore glasses, and lately I think I am getting my second sight—I can see better than I did a short while back." As he talked "Uncle Jim" sat in front of his shack smoking a pipe that appeared to be almost as old as its owner, and quite as strong, and smiling broadly, a perfect outpouring of his peculiarly serene mental make-up.

Bologna and Sausage Alike. When is a sausage not a sausage? When it's a bologna.

This puzzling question was decided, and then again it was not, recently by the Hoboken (N. J.) zoning commission. Just when it looked as if there was much difference between a sausage and a bologna it was decided that both of them wearing tight, they were the same thing.

It was an important question in Hoboken. It arose over the application of George E. Hesold, 85-87 Jackson street, for a permit to erect a plant for the manufacture of smoked ham, general provisions and bologna. The zoning ordinance of Hoboken forbids the manufacture of sausage in the business zone. There was much discussion and it seemed for a time as if the matter might reach serious proportions when Building Inspector Joseph Cummings finally definitely decided the question.

"They both wear tight, and that makes sausage and bologna the same thing," he said. The permit was refused, but decision was deferred until the next meeting.

Rivalry in Craying. It was Edward's first year at school and the teacher, finding one day that he had not mastered his lesson properly, told him to remain after school and he would help him. When the time for dismissal came and Edward saw the other children leaving he thought he was being punished by being kept in and he began to cry. The teacher in an effort to quiet him said, "Edward, I never heard such loud crying." Edward stopped and looked at her through his tears and said: "Well, you ought to hear my brother Donald, he's got me skinned a mile."

Women Conduct Church Service. At the East End Methodist church at Montreal on a recent Sunday the entire service was conducted by women members. They acted as ushers also, and furnished the musical program, while the pastor of the church sat with the congregation.
