Certain Foods Known in Asia Minor as Life Preserving.

System of Diet of the Early World When People Lived for Hundreds of Years.

It may interest readers to hear of a system of diet which is that of the early world when people lived hundreds of years without growing old. I heard of it while traveling in Asia Minor from an Armenian woman of sixty of very youthful appearance, writes M. E. Forbes in the Saturday Review. Traditions on diet and long life had been preserved in her family from very ancient times.

Her father had lived to one-hundred and fifty and her grandfather and her grandmother also. She attributed her youth to certain laws of diet and to a particular sweetmeat, a kind of sweet paste, which she claimed was one of the foods of the patriarchs and enabled them to live to their great age. It prolongs youth and retards old age, and is made from two of the life-preserving foods mixed with honey and other ingredients. She believed that old age and disease were ne to unsuitable and wrong combinations of food and that a longer youth can be achieved by keeping as strictly as possible to the diet of the ancient

She divided food into three classes -the life giving, containing the protelds, fats and carbohydrates; the life preserving, only six in number; wine, olive oil, youhort. (fermented milk), butter, honey and dates; and the life destroying, five in number, which should never be eaten, and consist of flesh of meat, tea, coffee, beer and spirits. Her own diet consisted of wholemeal bread, eggs, vegetables, some of each of these life-preserving foods, and lentils, and at the midday and evening meals some of the sweetmeat, the latter being a very essential part of the diet. She claims that it is possible to maintain youth and vigor up to a very long time on this diet. I have tried it now for seven months, eating only very little fish and fowl. I have grown much stronger, my friends tell me I look much younger, and I have entirely got rid of a troublesome throat affection and cough which I suffered from for years and which I always feared would develop into consumption. Medicine and an operation failed to do me any good, but this diet seems to have eliminated the germs from my system, for I am entirely cured.

There are such a number of systems nowadays that one is apt to think very little of them, but I can testify that this system will yield the fullest results, only it must be conscientiously carried out, and, whatever else is eaten, the life-destroying foods should be given up.

Revenue From Trees.

The United States forestry service is endeavoring to get the cities and municipalities of the country into line for the proper forestation of such lands as these organizations might own and control. The fact is deplored in a recent paper on the subject that less than one-half of the land owned or controlled by the cities of New York state is properly cared for and made to pay for the keep.

Newberg, which leads in the development of municipal lands, has been engaged for some time in the task of reforesting its watershed so as to insure a supply of water and to derive a future income. This consists of 175 acres, of which 18 acres have been reforested. The work has been done by securing the interest of the school children, and each year 200 boys and girls are taken to the country for the purpose of tree-planting.

Burma Needs Farm Imploments. Need for agricultural machinery in Burma is growing every year. With a population of 12,000,000, the growth of which is not keeping pace with the new areas which are leing put under cultivation and with a constantly increasing acreage of cultivated land, there is an insufficiency of labor, and it is necessary to import farm laborers from India. Methods of farming are still primitive and the introduction loward relieving the shortage of labor. Moffitt, Rangoon.
