Sir Godfrey Thomas Acts As Royal Private Secretary And Has Numerous Duties

On of the busiest men in England is Sir Godfrey Thomas, the Prince of Wales' private secretary.

His duties are as numerous as they are varied. If the prince had promised to attend a dinner where he was to meet someone whom he had not met before — possibly an M.P., a magnate in the commercial world, or a distinguished foreign visitor—it would be the secretary's duty to inform the prince of the man's achievements, so that the royal guest, in conversation, might not appear ignorant of any notable thing that man had done.

For example, not long ago the prince met at the house of a friend a French scientist who had once, at considerable risk to himself, rescued a child from drowning. The prince's private secretary ascertained this fact, and the prince was able to please and gratify the scientist by referring to it.

Then, again, it is Sir Godfrey Thomas who supplies the prince with material for many of his public speeches.

A very important part of the private secretary's work is the receiving and interviewing of various people on behalf of the Prince of Wales. In the performance of this duty he has often to exercise considerable tact and discretion.

For example, the patronage of the Prince of Wales is sought in connection with charitable activities of many kinds. But before he gives his patronage to any charitable organization he must be perfectly certain that its conduct and management are absolutely straightforward.

People seeking the prince's patronage for such objects are usually seen by his private secretary, who sometimes may have to inform them that the prince cannot accede to their request. This he must do tactfully and without giving offence.

Another important duty that frequently falls to his lot is that of representing the Prince of Wales at various public and private functions which his royal highness is unable to attend in person. The performance of such a duty is not always an agreeable one, for people who have been expecting the personal attendance of the prince are apt to be disappointed when he is compelled to send a deputy.

His representative has to make them forget the disappointment as well as he can, and no one can do this more successfully than the tactful and pleasant-mannered private secretary.

Sir Godfrey Thomas is the person in charge of the Prince of Wales' correspondence, and is responsible for the conduct and management of the whole secretariat at York House.

No one is ever kept waiting for a reply to a letter addressed to York House, for machinery exists there for dealing with all letters promptly.

Monster Diamonds.

Up to date twenty-five diamonds have been found in South Africa that weighed over 100 carats, and nine of these were big enough to yield cut gems of over 100 carats weight.

The first of them, known as the Star of South Africa, weighed 288 carats, and was cut to 135 carats. It was found in 1867 by a trader named O'Reilly in Griqualand West. He was staying overnight with a Boer named Van Newkirk, whose little girl was playing with a large and very bright pebble. The Boer gave it to O'Reilly, who sold it to Sir Philip Wodehouse, governor of the colony, for $1,000. It was afterwards bought for $55,000 by the Earl of Dudley.

The Imperial, found at the Cape diggings in 1884, weighed 457 carats, and was for a while the largest diamond ever known in the world. It was priced at $1,000,000, and, cut to a "brilliant," became the property of the British crown.

It was altogether dwarfed, however, by the Jagersfontein diamond—otherwise known as the Excelsior—which in June, 1893, was picked up by a negro workman at Jagersfontein, in the Orange River Colony. The stone weighed 970 carats, or more than seven ounces.

But the huge Excelsior was in its turn dwarfed by the Cullinan, found four years later at the Premier mine, in the Transvaal. It weighed 3,250 carats, or a little over one and a third pounds avoirdupois. From it were cut a number of magnificent diamonds, principal of which was a "drop brilliant" of 516½ carats, two and three-tenths inches long and one and eight-tenths inches broad, valued at $5,000,000. It was presented to King Edward VII.

Kissing.

The Mongols and many Polynesians and negroes do not kiss, while the Eskimos are said to kiss, not as a mark of affection, but only as a prophylactic against disease. The Eskimo kiss is really an inhalation of breath, or a sniff, and the practice of sniffing to insure health is not confined to savages. Instead of kissing, rubbing noses, called "hongi," is the Malay and Polynesian substitute, but among the African negroes it is customary to show affection by means of a vigorous sniff. Cureau, in his "Savage Man in Central Africa," says that negroes are entirely ignorant of kissing.

Cotton.

America produces two-thirds of the cotton crop of the world, but she has only half the number of spindles that work in Lancashire, and she is able to export but one-twentieth part of all the cotton goods she makes. Lancashire's 60,000,000 spindles turn out annually enough square yards of fabrics to spread no fewer than seven thicknesses over the whole or Greater London.

No church should ever lose sight of the fact that its minister is human.

Afraid to Blow It Open.

On the porch of the abandoned postoffice at Markleeville which still bears the old sign because everybody knows the postoffice is now in the back of the general store, there is a large safe, also abandoned. It was left there by the superintendent of the County Mine, when the mine was abandoned some years ago. A sympathetic traveler asked a cowboy if the residents knew what was in it, and why they did not open it for its possible contents. "Yes, sir," said the cowboy. "We know exactly what that safe contains, and we have held a-many a rally to try to make up our minds what to do about it. She contains $6.40 and a bottle of whiskey, and we are afraid to blow her open for fear of bustin' the bottle."

Simplified Spelling.

Little Louis had gone to the kitchen to observe old Aunt Sarah, the colored cook, at work making biscuits. After he had sampled one, he observed:

"Aunt Sarah, I can spell now. These are made out of d-o, do."

"But that doesn't spell dough," Louis' mother corrected, as she entered the kitchen to give the cook some orders.

Whereupon Aunt Sarah thought that she, too, would enter the discussion. So she said:

"Dere's two kinds of do, chile. 'Do', what you shuts, and 'do', what you eats."

Expired Together.

The defendant, held in an Eastern court on the charge of keeping a dog without a license, repeatedly tried to interrupt the evidence but was hushed each time by the court. Finally the clerk turned to him and said: "Do you wish the court to understand that you refuse to renew your dog license?" "Yes, but—" "We want no 'buts.' You must renew your license or be fined. You know it expired on January 1st." "Yes," said the defendant, "and so did the dog."

Hoot, Mon!

A lecturer was holding forth on the subject of matrimony.

"Mine has been an ideal marriage," he exclaimed (while those whose marriages had not been ideal listened with pained interest). "My wife and I share our sorrows, our joys, our ambitions, our hopes, our—"

Then a Scotsman interrupted: "What aboot conversation?"

A lot of times we take undue credit to ourselves for a little self denial.

No one ought to have a leisure hour to devote to pure gossip.

Follow The A-B-C Trail To Satisfaction

The old hunter who can read the language of the woods has no trouble in finding his way through any waste of timberland—while the "tenderfoot" wanders at random.

It's a dangerous thing to walk in circles when you're alone in the woods.

And it's an expensive thing to shop in circles when you're spending your money to meet the needs of everyday life.

Do you realize that the buying and selling trail of to-day is perfectly blazed for you in the A-B-C Classified Section?

Every offer and every want is systematically grouped and alphabetically listed for your greatest convenience.

You can't go wrong on the A-B-C trail!
