Memory Test Concerning Popular Quotation.

Who Will Come Forward With Proof as to Authorship of Words Ascribed to Many?

Who said: "There, but for the grace of God, go I." Having asked practically every one we know and also some we did not know we have discovered ourselves to be as wise as when we started.

Eminent theologians, quite naturally it seemed to us, should have been the authorities from whose decision there could be no appeal on this question. Several of them, questioned, knew, but had for the moment forgotten. They were to let us know, says a Hartford Courant writer, not having heard from them. Others, not having forgotten, told us. If we had stopped with one all might have been well, but seeking corroborative testimony—a fellow worker having put the matter on a sporting basis, as it were, by betting $1 that John Bunyan said it—we went further and asked several of the eminent clergymen. Those who told us had so many favorites that we were more bewildered and amazed than when we began. John Milton, John Bunyan, John Wesley, Sir Isaac Newton, Francis Bacon, Samuel Johnson, Dr. John Donne, Bishop Hall, Dean Swift—we could not believe that Isaac Watts would have said that—these are some that we recall.

Eminent literary men, appealed to, were equally certain they knew and did not in all cases disguise an amused contempt that we should ask a question when the answer was of a nature that should spring spontaneously to the lips of the educated, but their choices were as varied as those of their eminent brothers in another field of endeavor. About the only addenda to the lists given by the clergymen, that we recall were Alexander Pope, Ben Jonson—we know he did not say it—William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, Sydney Smith and Thomas a Kempis; but they, when pressed, produced no documentary evidence.

A pebble cast into the Pacific at California will start in motion a wave that finally breaks upon the distant Asian shore, we have heard—we do not know who said that either, nor do we believe it—and in a somewhat similar fashion our query began to involve others. A young woman hearing of the quest kindly called up to inform us that Francis Bacon had said it. We asked her how she knew. She had attended a lecture shortly before and the lecturer had quoted the phrase and ascribed it to the man who once remarked that God Almighty planted the first garden. Somewhat to her surprise we asked if she could possibly get in touch with the lecturer and ascertain where the quotation with its credit might be found. The lecturer, it later developed, was certain of the fact, but could produce no authority for it. That started the young woman on a search among all the books of quotations that were ever written and are still extant in Hartford.

One person insisted somewhat heatedly and with no reservation that Milton said it. Perhaps he did, but aside from discovering that the blind poet once remarked that

For contemplation he and valor formed
For softness and sweet attractive grace
And also
Grace was in all her steps, Heaven in her eye, not to mention
Add grace that won who say to wish her adv.

we were unable to find that he was ever guilty of the bombastic and concerted remark under discussion.

And so it went, and so it goes. Perhaps some day we will know, but we have nearly given up hope.

A Little Different.

John, a senior in high school, has recently "acquired a girl," whom his father finds an added expense. The other evening he remonstrated with his son for spending so much money on the girl. "You didn't have to do that way in my day," he said. "I went to see my girl, she set me up a good dinner, and then I fed her a little taffy, and she counted the evening a lot of fun."

"Well, times have changed since then," John returned. "I go out to see my girl now, she feeds me a little taffy, and I set her up a good dinner. And I'm not sure whether she counts that evening a lot of fun."—In- dianapolis News.

Link With Famous Writer.

A link with Sir Walter Scott is the recent completion of the one hundred and twenty-fifth year of its existence of the Kelso (Scotland) Mail. The first printer, publisher and editor of the Mail was James Ballantyne, founder of the Ballantyne Press, Edinburgh, and the paper was founded on the advice and with the assistance of Scott, who was a school-fellow of Ballantyne at Kelso Grammar school. The first of Scott's works, including the first two volumes of "The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," were printed in the office of the Kelso Mail.

Little Girl (trusting into doctor's office).—Please, doctor, come at once to father. Mother's taken 'is temperature an' it's gone down.
Doctor.—That's all right, my dear—that's splendid.
"Tain't all right; it's gone right down. He's swallowed it."—Punch.

Cards bearing the words, "Cash Here," were placed over the desks of bank clerks who paid out money when banks were first instituted in England. As the usual pronunciation of these words was "Cash here," they became abbreviated into the one word which now is in daily use. Custom is a tyrant.

THE STRATHCONA.

How Dr. Wilfred Grenfell Got His Hospital Ship.

The recently reported loss of Dr. Grenfell's hospital ship, the Strathcona, off the Labrador coast, recalls to the minds of some people the story, told publicly by the medical missionary himself at a Canadian Club luncheon, of the manner in which such a steam vessel happened to be carrying on such a work in such a locality. Dr. Grenfell, after spending some time among the North Sea fishermen, came across to Labrador in 1892, and he has been endeavoring ever since to promote the welfare of the fishermen there in a variety of ways. Having established a hospital on land, it was necessary to find a seaworthy vessel to convey to it people along the coast who had met with serious accidents or become afflicted with curable diseases. His first vessel for this service was an 80-ton schooner, but its usefulness along a rocky and imperfectly charted course was seriously impaired by the occurrence of storms.

The Labrador coast belongs to Newfoundland, and the friends of the mission there urged Dr. Grenfell to try to obtain a steam vessel that would be able to sail in all weathers with patients. At that time Mr. Fielding was Canadian Minister of Finance, and Dr. Grenfell called on him at Halifax to lay the case before him. Mr. Fielding informed him that Lord Strathcona was then in Montreal, and suggested that he might be able to give some useful advice in the matter of raising the necessary funds. It will be remembered that Strathcona, then Donald A. Smith, had, before he was sent to Fort Garry in connection with the first Riel Rebellion in 1871, spent twenty years in the Hudson Bay Company's service in Labrador, and he gave Dr. Grenfell a very sympathetic hearing. After listening for some time to a statement of difficulties, of which he had himself first-hand knowledge, he said to Dr. Grenfell: "I thoroughly understand your difficulties and the necessity of the situation. A sailing schooner is quite inadequate to the work, and you should have a steam vessel. I will give you one." Which he did, at a cost to himself of several thousands of dollars. This is the vessel recently lost, and it is to be hoped that before long Dr. Grenfell may be supplied with another as good, or better.

Early Nova Scotia.

A monograph on "Nova Scotia: The Royal Charter of 1621," by Col. Alexander Fraser, LL.D., has just been published as part of the Transactions of the Royal Canadian Institute.

Sir William Alexander, as Col. Fraser points out, took part in the great movement of the time—the plantation of overseas colonies. This was the time of the settlement of North Carolina and Virginia in the south and of New England in the north; in fact, the progressive nations of Western Europe were extremely busy spying out new territory. The success of Sir William Alexander's enterprise was not as great at the time as might have been hoped, and the future of Nova Scotia for some years was clouded by the conflicting claims of the French. In fact, in 1631 King Charles requested Sir William, at the instance of the French Court, to remove all the people from Port Royal (now Annapolis Royal), and deliver it up to the French. This brought to an end Alexander's work of actual settlement of Nova Scotia.

"The possibilities of that enterprise were great," says Col. Fraser, "and Sir William Alexander showed uncommon vision, for his day, in evolving a scheme which, under capable business or commercial control, might have brought to Nova Scotia prosperity equal to that enjoyed in New England. Instead, we have, in his case, an example of a poet, a philosopher, an accomplished officer with dream of empire revolving in his mind, going beyond his depth in the sea of practical business life. Yet he was a great pioneer with a prophet's faith; a promoter with the promoter's unflinching enthusiasm; a gentleman adventurer with the unbending courage of his ancient race; and a choice spirit which hope deferred was unable to break."

A "Yankee Trick."

The president of the Corn Trade Association, with other interested parties, accompanied by Secretary Griffith, of the Canadian High Commissioner's office interviewed the United States Consul-General, R. P. Skinner, in London recently regarding the mixture in Canadian spring wheat which it is alleged takes place while the wheat is en route from Canada through the United States to Great Britain.

The Corn Trade Association's president stated that the United States Export Association admitted that Canadian wheat which had been submitted for examination showed evidences of having been mixed with other grades. This applied to cargoes which had come through Philadelphia and Baltimore, it was stated, but those cargoes which had come via New York offered no cause for complaint.

Another speaker said that he had received cargoes of wheat which had proved to have been mixed with other grades up to twenty per cent.

Will Crown Buildings.

Canada's new Parliament Buildings are soon to be crowned. All summer visitors have been asking, "When will the tower be finished?" The only answer forthcoming was that only a certain number of feet could be added each year to permit of the work properly settling. Now, it is understood, the decision has been reached to finish the work without further delay. Arrangements are now being made to have the designs for the carving on the topwork undertaken so that the contract can be awarded this winter and the finishing touches on the imposing tower begun in the spring.

The oldest known picture in the world is on exhibition in the public museum at Cairo, Egypt. It was found in the tomb of Nefer Maat, at Medum, and is thought by the best authorities to have been drawn in the time of the first Egyptian dynasty, about 4,400 years before the birth of Christ. The picture shows a flock of six geese.

Chance and Effort.
For a long time Paddy Nolan had been anxious to possess a watch, and, at last, in one of his rare moments of prosperity, he resolved to make the plunge. He bought one from a local jeweler—a massive gemstone time-piece which the vendor guaranteed, subject to the usual conditions to keep in order for a year. Long before the year had expired, Paddy returned to the shop. With him he took his cherished purchase, which was looking very tired and sorry for itself.

The jeweler examined the watch, and shrugged his shoulders ominously. "But you must have had an accident with it," he said.

"A small one, sure enough, sir. To tell the truth about two months ago I was feeding the pig and the watch fell into the trough."

"Then," snapped the jeweler, "you should have brought it back to me before."

"Sure," replied Paddy, "I brought it back as soon as I could. We only killed the pig yesterday."
