ABOUT TO BE WEDDED, WAS BURNED TO DEATH

Guelph Italian Succumbs to Injuries When Coal Oil Can Ignited. Guelph, Ont., Nov. 23.—As the result of severe burns which he received when a coal oil can exploded as he was attempting to start a fire in his kitchen stove early on Tuesday morning, Michael D'Angelo, an Italian employed as section man on the Grand Trunk, died in St. Joseph's Hospital.

Deceased lived alone in a small house at forty-seven Inkerman street, when his clothing ignited. He finally in desperation ran out into the street in clothing falling off him. When seen by a neighbor he was practically naked and terribly burned from head to foot.

Deceased was thirty-five years of age and had been a resident of this city for the past ten years. It is understood that his sweetheart is about to start for Guelph from her home in Italy, and the pair were to be married here on her arrival.

Heiress Pays $25,000 To Settle Alienation Suit

Warsaw, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The suit brought by Mrs. James O. Howard, of Castle, against Margaret E. Pierce, young Castle heiress, for the alienation of the affections of Mrs. Howard's forty-four-year-old husband has been settled for $25,000.

A Wyoming county jury in September gave Mrs. Howard a verdict of $42,500. From this an appeal was taken. Mrs. Howard, who was in poor health and compelled to earn her living by picking beans, decided to accept a compromise offer.

Miss Pierce, the defendant, is in Florida on her honeymoon having married Lyle Smith, a village youth of her age.

WIRELESS AND CROOKS.

Great Invention Has Been an Aid to Justice.

A sharp, cold wind blew up the St. Lawrence river from the east, and with it came the fog from the Atlantic. Four masts and a funnel loomed up indistinctly, away out on the waters where, a few minutes before, sunshine had held sway.

From the shadow of the wharf at Father Point a skiff shot out and lost itself in the mist. The dismal horn of the steamer hooted, and the bell from the lighthouse buoy sent out its warning message.

In the skiff four sailors—pea-jacketed, brass-buttoned, visor-capped officers of the pilot service—rowed with grim determination.

On the steamer Montrose, five or six miles down the river, a nervous, careworn passenger paced the deck. "Half speed!" rang the bells from head to foot.

"What are we doing now?" inquired the passenger of Dr. Stewart, the ship's surgeon.

"This is Father Point, Mr. Robinson, and we take the pilot aboard here," replied the doctor. "You can see the boat coming out to meet us—yes, over there!"

"There seems to be a good many pilots in the boat, doctor," remarked "Mr. Robinson." And as he scanned the approaching craft there was evident anxiety stamped on his face.

"Yes," replied Dr. Stewart; "there are four."

"Stop!" clanged the bell from the bridge to the engine-room. The men in the skiff rested on their oars, a rope uncoiled neatly, and the little craft was drawn alongside the larger vessel.

A few seconds later Inspector Dew, of Scotland Yard, and his companions stood on the deck of the Montrose.

The little party stood chatting with the captain of the Montrose. Dr. Stewart and "Robinson" were walking up and down the deck. Inspector Dew glanced sharply at "Robinson."

Yes, there was no mistake; he was his man.

Quietly the inspector went up to "Robinson."

"I want to see you for a moment below," he said, then, turning to Chief Constable McCarthy, who had accompanied him, he said, "That's the man."

"I arrest you in the name of the king," said McCarthy to "Robinson." "You are my prisoner. Anything you say will be taken down in writing and used in evidence against you."

Dr. Crippen, the murderer of his second wife, was an arrested man. A few minutes later a woman's scream from below told that Miss Le Neve, still in her disguise as "Mr. Robinson's" son, had also been discovered and arrested.

These arrests had been brought about by wireless, says a writer in Popular Wireless. Two hours out from Antwerp, Captain Kendall had had his suspicions that amongst the passengers on his ship he numbered the wanted Dr. Crippen and Miss Le Neve. He made acute investigations, and two days later was so sure that he was right that he wirelessed to his owners.

POISONS THAT BLIND.

Sour Cream May Have Temporary Effect on Sight.

One of the strange effects of the poisoning called "botulium" is the fact that all the sufferers go temporarily blind.

Why a poison taken internally, should affect the eyesight is an interesting point, and a rather mysterious one, yet it is well known that certain foods, drugs, and fruits have a most injurious effect upon the eyes.

Some years ago a family, were all poisoned by eating rabbit pie, and though happily none of them died, yet all went temporarily blind.

Sour cream causes a curious weakening of the sight, technically known as "amblyopia." A similar form of blindness comes from eating tinned fish, and is not uncommon in Italy, where the peasants eat a good deal of salt and dried fish.

There are two different fruits which cause blindness. One is the so-called "finger cherry" which grows wild in Queensland. The fruit is a long red berry, not unpleasant to the taste, and is common in the Cairns and Townsville districts.

This "cherry" acts by destroying certain nerves, and the blindness resulting is incurable.

The other blinding fruit is also a native of Australia. It is a kind of melon, which appears in great quantities after the breaking of a long drought.

"Horses" and cattle eat it greedily, and as a result lose their sight. At one time the horse raisers of New South Wales insisted upon a Government inquiry into the matter.

The milky sap which exudes from an African tree called the Acaeples Gigantea is most dangerous to the eyes. A single drop coming in contact with the eyeball causes total blindness.

This tree produces a beautiful, silky vegetable down excellent for stuffing pillows, yet so much are its poisonous properties dreaded that the natives rarely pick or use this valuable product.

Wireless Efficiency. "Look at the photograph of the wireless policeman" of the future," writes R. W. Hallows in the Strand Magazine. "His aerial consists of wires concealed beneath his tunic; the earth-wire runs down his leg to the iron-shod heel of his boot—and he will be permitted to admit that a policeman's boot makes ample contact with the ground."

"Upon his sleeve is pinned a buzzer, which actuated by the radio-receiving circuits, emits a ringing note to attract his attention when he is wanted by headquarters. The rest of the apparatus is so small that it can be carried in a case in his pockets or in a small pouch upon his belt. Fitted out in this way, Robert will become even more useful than he has been in the past, for when his presence is required in any quarter he will be able to receive a message without leaving his post. In an outbreak of riot, for instance, there is an outbreak of riot, a hundred 'Radio Roberts' can be told instantly just where to go, and their sturdy forms will appear from all sides in time to 'move on' the offenders before they can do any serious damage.

"The wireless doctor" is another feature of the new age. You will notice that the aerial consists of a wire running around the top of his car. As he is speeding along from one house to another, the receiver placed near his ear suddenly begins to talk. Dr. Jones, Dr. Jones, Dr. Jones, it calls. Dr. Jones, in a short pause; then—"Accident in Bridge road; 'Urgent case, Mr. Smith, of 14 High street.' Such particulars as are known are given to the doctor, who makes his way without delay to the place where his aid is required. He reads the messages from time to time to the drug store to order the despatch of medicines to urgent cases, or to the hospital to summon a nurse if her services are required without delay.

"Many a man and woman may owe their lives in future years to the saving of time effected by the doctor's wireless telephone."

Ireland's Harp. We have been hearing a good deal lately about the Irish harp, as we see it on the Royal Standard. But does any one know why the harp displayed the "crown of Munster"? According to a recent authority, it was Henry VIII.—the first British monarch to call himself "King of Ireland"—who definitely made the change, though no Irish device of any sort appeared on the Royal Standard until the reign of James I. Various guesses have been made as to Henry's motive, one being that the three golden crowns on a blue ground might be mistaken for the Pope's triple crown. But the Earl of Northumberland, writing in the seventeenth century, had a view of his own rather interesting just now. He thought the harp was singularly appropriate, since it resembled Ireland "in being such an instrument that costs more to keep it in tune than it is worth."

Japanese Cleanliness. The cleanliness of the Japanese is well known. The poorest Japanese coolie regards his evening bath as a sacred duty and as the greatest luxury of the day. By the time the head of the family is home from his labors his wife has the tub and the water ready. In goes the little man first, then his wife, then the children in order of age. Afterwards the family, clad in clean saris, are ready for supper.

The Linnet. A bird more frequently mentioned in Burns' poetry than either the blackbird or the song-thrush is the linnet, or "linnie" (a word that seems to include the various finches). It seems to have been the favorite bird of the Ayrshire bard. Premier to Speak in Lanark. Premier King will visit Lanark county toward the end of next week and make a number of speeches in support of David Findlay, Liberal candidate in the coming by-election. The prime minister will probably speak at Carleton Place, Almonte, Smith's Falls, Perth and possibly other places.

"I Was Run Down" "Body was completely covered with Boils" "If you have ever had boils, you know how painful and annoying even one or two can be. But imagine having your whole body almost entirely covered with them! I am a watchmaker by trade, making a specialty of repairing the highest grade movements. This is probably the most trying of a nervous individual like me. Working under great strain both day and night for three months, brought me almost to a state of collapse. I was so irritable and nervous that the slightest thing would send me up in the air. If I managed to get a few hours of sleep at night I felt I was miserable. During this time boils began to appear on different parts of my body and the pain from them made life a misery. My suffering was so great at times that I felt there was nothing left for me to do but to end it all. I consulted doctors but they all told me that if I didn't give up my work and live out of doors, I would go into a decline. As I had no money I couldn't do this. In fact paying doctors' bills and buying medicines used up all the money I made. Finally in desperation, I decided that I would either kill or cure myself, so I began to study my case. I realized that I was completely run down as any one could possibly be with a bad case of nerves. What I needed was building up. After reading descriptions of different preparations, the one which appeared to be the best for me was Carnol. It has simply performed miracles for me. Four bottles have done more than months of travel abroad. I feel like a two-year old. I sleep eight hours every night and eat three good meals a day. My skin is like a baby's, free from blemishes of any kind and I have now almost forgotten that I have ever had such things as nerves. I want everybody who is ailing to know about Carnol, because I have such faith in it I believe it will cure any human ill." Carnol is sold by your druggist, and if you can conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle to him and he will refund your doctor's bills and buying medicines money. 1-823 For sale by The Mahood Drug Co.
