What the Press Agents Say About Coming Attractions

Re: In "His Majesty." Tonight the Rex Stock Company will open their three nights' engagement in "His Majesty." Not since that delightful comedy "In Walked Jimmy," has "Rex" had a real "Rex" part, but the last half of this week of the popular comedy he comes into his own again, in one of those uproarious comedy parts, that while you laugh, gives you a little tug at your heart.

"What's Wrong With the Women?"

The eternal battle of the sexes, raging from the very dawn of the human race, is the theme of Daniel Carson Goodman's powerful dramatic and prophetic photoplay "What's Wrong With the Women?" now playing at the Allen theatre.

ALLEN

WATCHING ICEBERGS.

Work To Be Done In Ocean East of Canada.

Whenever there is an unusually long spell of heat, icebergs move from their accepted routes in the most erratic manner.

Even on the "Grand Circle" route from New York to the British Isles icebergs are often encountered, and it is no uncommon thing for a liner captain to swerve south perhaps one hundred miles rather than risk a collision.

Some time after the loss of the liner Titanic, it was decided to inaugurate an Atlantic ice-patrol, with the object of reporting the presence of icebergs and icefields.

They were not to be destroyed, but merely hunted down. In this way mariners could sail with a certain feeling of safety.

This patrol was instituted by the United States Government, and with a few years' experience, it has done very good work already.

The patrol boat is called the Androscoogin, and she is specially fitted out to withstand the dangers of the Atlantic.

Such work as Androscoogin's crew has to do is obviously very trying. It calls for extra nerve and expert seamanship. This vessel has to sail right into the teeth of the icefields.

Every time she investigates, she runs the most awful risks of disaster—but the other ships profit. Then the icebergs are to be considered as "off New York" and storms, fogs and bitterly cold weather are practically constant.

It is the Androscoogin's task to report the presence of bergs, both large and small. She does this by means of her wireless, giving the latitude and longitude of the berg, with some rough idea of its size and its course, if moving.

This information is wireless twice a day. If the ice conditions are very serious, messages are sent out every hour. These messages go direct to the Hydrographic Office of the American navy at New York.

This in turn warns the various shipping offices and the press.

Many interesting things have been discovered by the patrol boat.

For instance, some mariners cling to the idea that icebergs will give off an echo which can be destroyed by gunfire. Androscoogin found both theories quite wrong.

But she did prove that so delicately is a berg balanced that the vibrations caused by the whistling of the siren may break off blocks large enough to sink a boat.

Sometimes she meets with one or more high pinacles that catch the wind and acted as sails, driving along the ice at a speed approaching a knot an hour. These "sails" accounted for the freak bergs seen out of the beaten tracks.

All such information is of great value to captains. There is nothing more to be feared in the North Atlantic than icebergs, and for a skipper to know he is more or less on safe ground is a great relief to him.

Lincoln's Friends.

George Brown as a great steady influence in the troubled times of the '60's, when relations between Britain and the United States were delicate from a series of incidents in the Civil War, is recalled by Fred London, librarian of the Public Library at London, Ont., in an article in the Dalhousie Review, Halifax, entitled "Canadian Opinion of Abraham Lincoln."

"The North in its time of trial had no more steadfast friend in Canada than George Brown," writes Mr. London. "On the public platform and through the columns of the Toronto Globe he championed the cause of Liberty and freedom, and used every effort to influence Canadian public opinion in favor of the North, and strenuously opposed that small section of Canadian people who, chiefly located in Toronto and aping the upper classes in England, gave comings and goings to the South by aiding their plots in this country."

The advocacy of Lincoln began when he was almost unknown in this country, but, after the President's declaration for emancipation, Brown said in the Globe: "It is a bold step which Mr. Lincoln has taken, and it will be sustained by the voice of the civilized world. Four millions of men and women will cease to be chattels and will attain the dignity of human beings. Who shall say that this is too dear a price to pay for the horrors of civil war?"

"By the time the election of 1864 had come around," adds Mr. London, "Canadians generally would agree with the Globe's tribute to Lincoln's 'honesty, patriotism and practical ability.'"

No Reciprocity.

No reciprocity treaty with Canada is likely to be brought about, according to Senator McCumber, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. He points out that the Tariff Act makes no provision for reciprocity and that a special treaty would be needed. He doubts whether this could be arranged or ratified by the Senate. Senator McCumber does not believe the tariff law will seriously cut down importations, and predicts it will not seriously divert Canadian trade from the United States.

Mr. Raney's Treat.

Could anyone imagine Hon. W. E. Raney, K.C., Attorney-General of the Province of Ontario, offering a drink to a thirty reporter? Well, he did. It was at Erin, Ont. The United Farmers were holding a picnic there on a sweltering hot day. The newspaper man would have been glad to strike any oasis in the desert.

"Would you like a drink?" asked the Hon. the Attorney-General. "Sure," cried the newspaper man. "Well, there's the pump."

When they are engaged she will call him the light of her life, and when they are married he will keep it up a good deal of the time.

Any married man can tell you that having a heated discussion with your wife every night won't keep the house warm.

Do it and it will soon be done.
