FIERY, ITCHING SKIN IS QUICKLY SOOTHED WITH THIS SULPHUR

Menthio-Sulphur, a pleasant cream, will soothe and heal skin that is irritated or broken out with eczema; that is covered with ugly rash or pimples, or is rough or dry. Nothing subdues fiery skin eruptions so quickly, says a noted skin specialist.

The moment this sulphur preparation is applied the itching stops and after two or three applications, the eczema is gone and the skin is delightfully clear and smooth. Sulphur is so precious as a skin remedy because it destroys the parasites that cause the burning, itching or disfigurement. Mentho-Sulphur always heals eczema right up.

A small jar of Mentho-Sulphur may be had at any good drug store.

Frederic Harrison Was Dean of English Letters Last of Great Victorians

Frederic Harrison, who died recently in his ninety-second year, has often been called "the last of the great Victorians," but the title is not particularly apt, so long as Thomas Hardy survives. No great Victorian, however, touched literature at so many points. Indeed it has been said that not since the time of Bacon has an Englishman written so much and so well upon so many different subjects as Frederic Harrison. One of the most remarkable things about him is that to the last he preserved his keen interest in what was going on about him and this interest is probably the explanation of the charm and freshness that marked his writings as much at the age of ninety as they had at the age of thirty.

In an article of almost prophetic timeliness Herbert L. Stewart, professor of Philosophy in Dalhousie University, says of him: "He can recall being taken as a small child by his father to watch the great procession on the morning when Queen Victoria was crowned.

As a boy he played cricket and fished over areas that are now crowded by fashionable London residences. The earliest political struggle still vivid in his imagination was that which swept away the Corn Laws and established free trade.

His memory stretches back to a time when England was traversed by a network of stage coaches and the project of a railroad was scarcely more advanced than the present scheme for an aerial post, when the British fleet consisted only of sailing vessels and its guns discharged only balls of solid iron, when persons were hanged for theft, when chimneys were cleaned by little boys dragging up the brush from the hearthstone and when it was thought a notable reform to substitute an undersized man—generally a dwarf—for the wretched child if the chimney happened to be on fire!

Who does not catch his breath at the thought of one still alive who has talked with a naval officer that served on the Bellerophon when Napoleon I. was being conveyed to English waters? And who else among us can have spoken with those who saw Dr. Samuel Johnson receive his honorary degree in the Sheldonian Theater, or has heard from those who heard from an eyewitness about the scenes in Oxford when James II. expelled the Fellows of Magdalen College? Here, if ever, we have a man who owes his reminiscences to posterity."

In closing his "Autobiographic Memoirs" ten years ago he quoted Moore's lines: "When I remember all The friends so linked together I've seen around me fall, Like leaves in wintry weather, I feel like one Who treads alone Some banquet hall deserted."

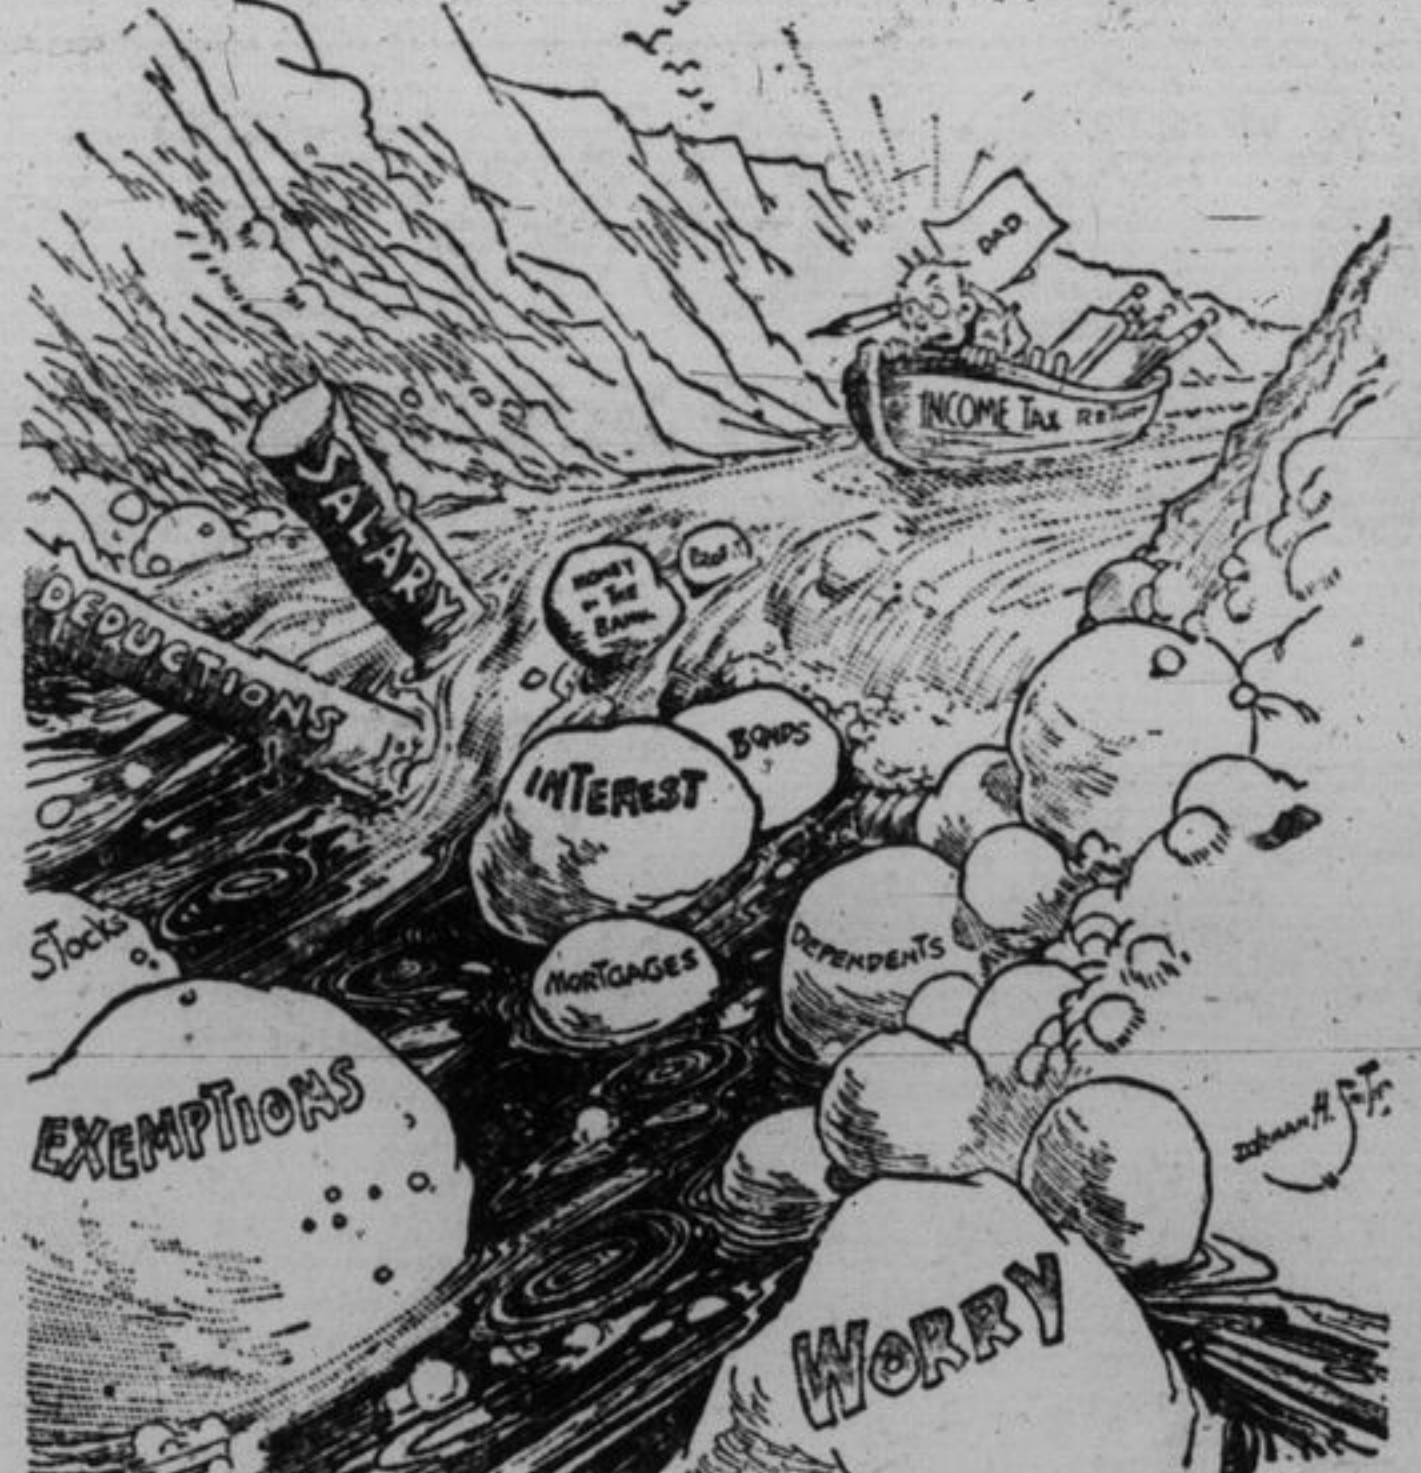

For sixty years Frederic Harrison knew everybody of first rate importance in England and most of the big men of Europe. Tennyson, Carlyle, George Eliot, Matthew Arnold, Huxley, George Meredith and Herbert Spencer were his acquaintances or friends. Tennyson was sensitive to a criticism of him made by Arnold, who placed him second to Byron, though placing him easily first among the Victorian poets. He had many a controversy with Huxley, and on one occasion apologized to Huxley for an unfair criticism by saying "a dog should not bite a dog." He also crossed swords with Ruskin who was his intimate friend.

Before these days he had been the admirer and defender of John Bright and had re-echoed his criticism of the Crimean war; and a man of action as well as a man of thought, had gone to Italy in the days of Italy's final struggle for liberty and had done his part in awakening British sympathy for that nation.

He was a fearless critic and many times in his life took the unpopular side. He supported the trades union movement and thus offended powerful friends, but did not hesitate to criticize extremists in the labor movement when they arose. As a rule, however, Harrison was one of those rare critics who forced admiration even from those with whom he was most strongly differing. In 1901 he visited the United States on the invitation of a number of leading men, including Joseph Choate and Theodore Roosevelt.

Frederic Harrison was the chief protagonist in England of the positivist theory of Auguste Comte, the French philosopher, and this was his favorite pre-occupation to the end of his days. As a youth he appears to have been of a deeply religious turn of mind, but later he conceived a hot antagonism to the Church of England as a political and social scandal. The time came when he could not accept the Divine or mystical revelation, but some sort of religion was an essential to his being, and there are those who believe that in reality Harrison was not far removed from the essence of Christian faith. He has given several definitions of positivism, of which the most concise is "Positivism on the religious side is in itself an effort to revive the moral and social efficacy of Christian agas on a truly scientific and historical basis—placing what is permanent in these institutions on the firm ground of sociology instead of revelation." The closing sentence of his "Religion of Humanity" is "The service of humanity, the only service I much value, is a heart full of loving sympathies and a life full of humane acts."

What Grows on Graves. Paris, March 2.—A despatch from Dijon says that in conformity with a promise which the Bishop of Dijon gave a delegation of French-Canadiana whilst he was visiting Ottawa in 1922, he has just sent them a small sack of wheat which was grown on the graves of Canadian soldiers in France.

TO PROTECT FARMERS. Drought Causes Very Serious Situation in Africa.

Cape Town, S.A., March 2.—General Hertzog, leader of the Nationalist party, moved in the House of Assembly that immediate steps be taken by the government to protect farmers of the union against the free importation of slaughtered stock. He asserted that the stock farmers of the union were being ruined as a result of these importations from Rhodesia and Bechuanaland.

Premier Smuts admitted that the situation was very grave, owing to the drought and the existence of a growing surplus of cattle within the union. He pointed to the difficulties in view of the customs agreements with Rhodesia, and the nature of the protectorate's unneighborly attitude respecting those agreements. The premier said he preferred to follow the recommendation of last year's select committee and introduce forthwith legislation with the purpose of paying bounties of half a penny per pound on cold storage beef, and a farthing a pound on animals, exported. The cold storage companies, he said, welcomed the proposal, which the premier hoped would reduce the cattle surplus. The debate was adjourned.

FIXED WHEAT PRICE. Demanded in Resolution at Agricultural Conference.

St. Paul, Minn., March 2.—Resolutions demanding a fixed price on wheat were adopted at the closing session of the northwest agricultural price stabilization conference. The resolution urged that in the event congress does not pass any relief legislation at this session, that President Harding call an extra session to provide this relief.

In lieu of the price-fixing resolution approved by the majority, the committee recommended that, as a measure for speedy relief, the governor of every state where wheat is grown on a large scale, be requested before April 1st to appoint a committee of three to meet the first week in May as a fair price committee.

The conference unanimously approved co-operative marketing and adopted resolutions, without a dissenting voice, declaring: "That we demand the earliest completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, in order that adequate water transportation may be secured from the northwest to the ocean and European ports."

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

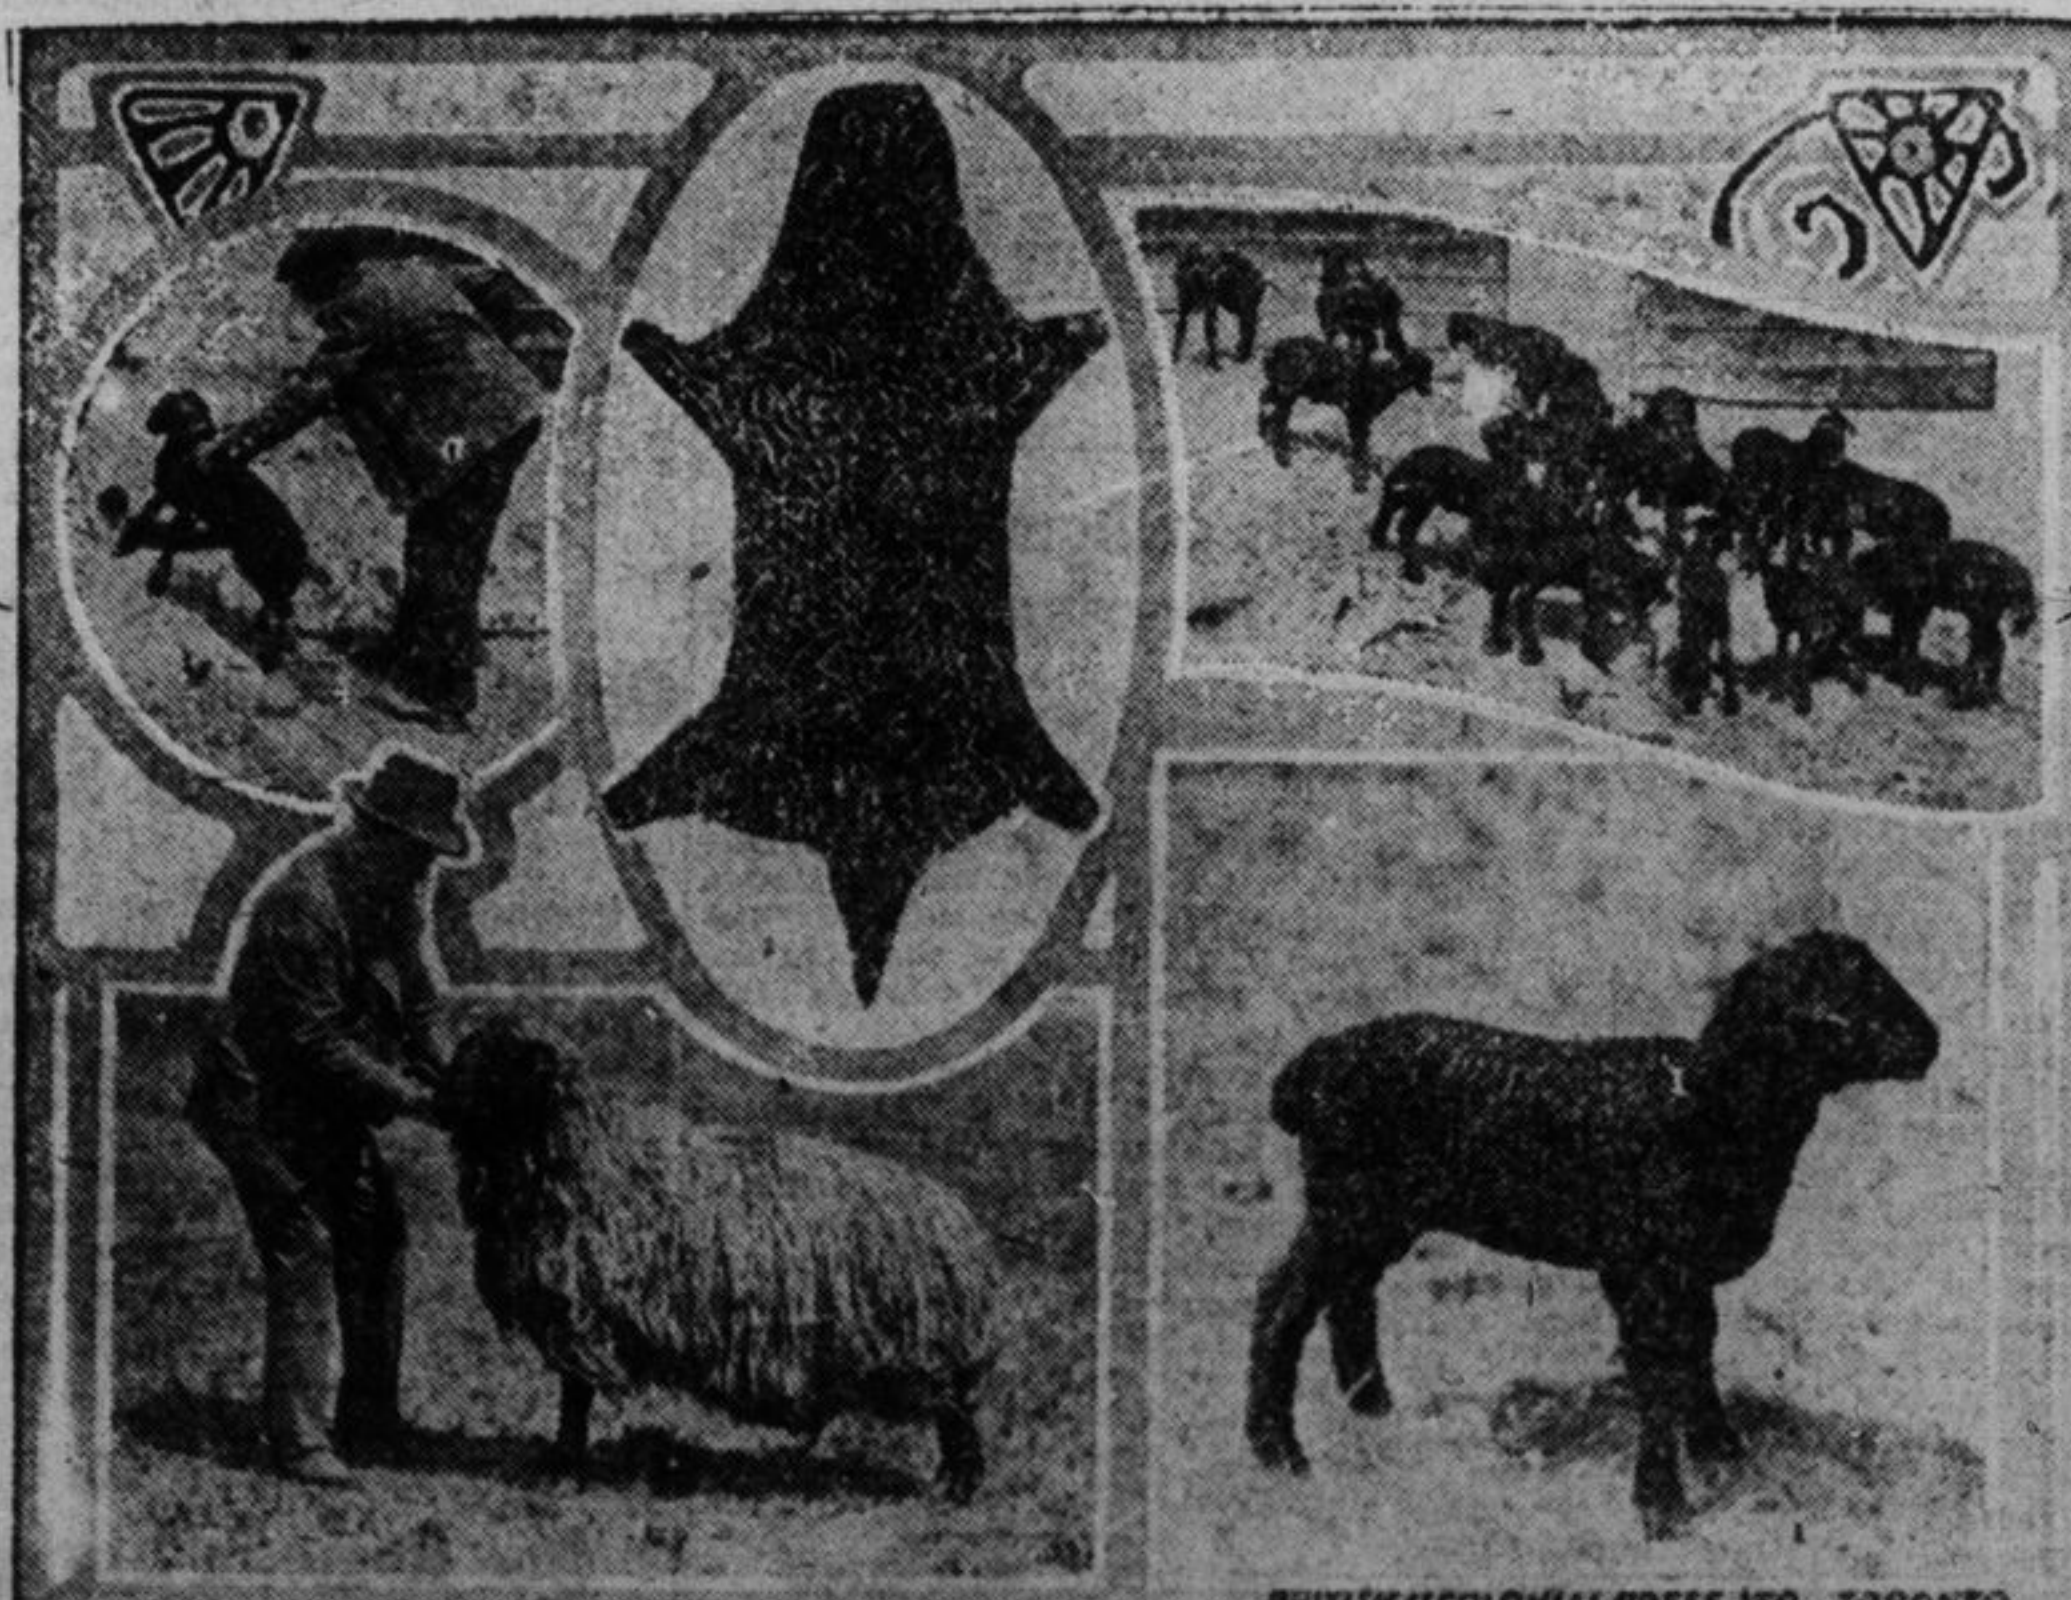

Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens So Naturally That Nobody Can Tell.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

In reply to queries in the House at Ottawa made by Mr. Stevens, Dr. Beaudry stated that Canada has 8,500 drug addicts. Prince Edward Island is the only spot in the Dominion free of drug peddlers and addicts. Thirty Chinamen have already been deported and 200 more are in custody charged with handling drugs.

BUSINESS AND ROMANCE BLENDED ON KARAKUL SHEEP RANCH.

A business enterprise being successfully carried on at a ranch fifteen miles from Calgary by Dr. O. H. Patrick has a history full of romance and adventure. In spite of Russian export and Canadian import prohibitions, Dr. Patrick succeeded in bringing to Canada in 1913 a flock of 26 Karakul sheep from Bokhara, Russia which produced the famous "Persian Lamb." The animals cost $65,000. In ten years this flock has increased to 800 and the doctor is marketing the finest quality Persian lamb skins, and lamb and mutton of the highest quality. The Karakul sheep were cross-bred with other varieties and the quality of the fur thereby improved. In the picture above is shown, in the lower left hand corner, Dr. Patrick with one of his famous rams. Next to it a lamb, under two weeks old, at which age they are killed for their fur. Above, a Welsh shepherd is demonstrating the use of the shepherd's crook. In the centre a "Persian Lamb" pelt, and to the right a group of rare and valuable little animals.

WELSH PLAY IS CAUSTIC. Village Life Depicted as Petty by Caradoc Evans. London, March 1.—The new play, "Taffy," written by Caradoc Evans, novelist and journalist, was greeted with violent protests, amounting almost to serious disorder, when it was staged in the Prince of Wales theatre here last night for the first time. The play presents Welsh village life in a manner which the audience bitterly resented last night. It makes Welsh village life mean and petty, with not a little hypocrisy among the villagers. The author is a Welshman himself, and in some of his novels he has presented much the same aspect of the lives of some of his countrymen. The noisy interruptions of the play were confined to the occupants of the gallery. The portions of the audience occupying other parts of the theatre evidently appreciated the dramatic qualities of the play, and made an effective counter-demonstration. Resolutions Passed By Urban School Trustees. Brantford, March 1.—The Ontario Urban School Trustees' Association this morning passed two resolutions, one to eliminate the necessity of school trustees resigning ten days before nomination for city councillor, and one calling on the dominion government to pay the full cost of the education of soldiers' children, when these soldiers were in barracks, which paid no tax. Mustapha Kemal Pasha declared at Constantinople that the issue of peace was in the hands of the Allies, who had only to recognize Turkey's judicial and economic independence. Important papers are sometimes lost sight of by putting them into the family Bible.
