What Sleeping Sickness is and What is Known About It.

Lately the newspapers have had a lot to say about sleeping sickness. Indeed, ever since the influenza epidemic of 1913 there have been a good many cases.

You must not confuse the disease we call sleeping sickness with the disease met in Africa and known by the same name. First, I'll tell you about the latter condition.

This was first described by Dr. Livingstone, the famous African explorer. I wonder who has not read the fascinating story of his explorations, of his illness and of the struggles of his friends to rescue him.

The African disease is carried by the bite of the tsetse fly. Just as the mosquito carries malaria, so does this fly carry sleeping sickness. It is transmitted, not only to men, but to animals, as well. Possibly some of the large forms of animal life disappeared from the earth by reason of disease carried by the tsetse fly.

Fortunately for North America, we do not have this kind of sleeping sickness. What we call sleeping sickness is entirely different. I tried to popularize the name "epidemic coma," but sleeping sickness it is called and will be till the end of time, I suppose.

The disease we read about these days is known to the medical profession as "encephalitis lethargica." The brain is the "encephalon." Encephalitis, then, is inflammation of the brain substance. In epidemic coma the encephalitis is characterized by sleepiness, lethargy and stupor.

There are a few authorities who think there is some sort of relationship between encephalitis and infantile paralysis. This is a matter far from proven. However, it is certain that the definite cause of both troubles is unknown.

It is believed that sleeping sickness is due to a germ or virus which, even though it is not identical with the causative agent of influenza, may be stimulated into activity by the influenza bug, whatever that is.

There are cases of sleeping sickness which come on with no history of influenza, due perhaps to the mildness of the attack. In other instances the coma follows almost Immediately after the illness from influenza.

Inability to keep awake, long spells of sleeping, loss of ability to concentrate, mental dullness such as is met in typhoid fever, double vision or drooping of the lids—these are the familiar symptoms of the mild attacks of epidemic coma.

It is a disease which, as I have indicated, is little understood, but fortunately it is recovered from as a rule. The patient is kept quiet, free from noise and disturbance, is sustained by proper feeding and, in due time, the symptoms disappear.

Enoch M. Chase, an old time printer, born in Brockville, and who learned the trade in the Brockville Recorder under the late Col. David Wylie, is dead at Toledo, O., at the age of seventy-six years.
