OLD TIME SCHOONER ABANDONS UPPER LAKES

Three-Master Hattie Hutt to Carry Coal From Oswego to Kingston.

A despatch from Chatham, Ont., says:

With the departure of the three-masted schooner Hattie Hutt to new fields of labor on Lake Ontario, the upper lakes say farewell to sailing ships.

The Hattie Hutt was the last survivor. She was well known in Lake Erie, Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair and Lake Michigan, being regarded for the last few years as somewhat of an oddity. Pleasure craft carrying sail are common enough, but a freighter depending on sailing power to compete with the great steel carriers with engines of unlimited horsepower, seemed rather ludicrous. Even the fishing fleets have long since given up wind power and depend on steam and gasoline. Nevertheless, the Hattie Hutt was the emblem of an earlier day when the three-masters were the kingpins of the lake transportation industry. The schooner will be engaged this year in carrying coal from Oswego to Kingston.

The last of the three-masters is a staunch craft of 188 net tons, 127 feet long. She was built entirely of oak in the Martel ship yards in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, in 1873. Her latest skipper was Frank Granville, who now retires after 44 years of sailing on the lakes. In all that time he never had a ship which pleased him more than the Hattie Hutt.

In all his forty-four years as a skipper on the upper lakes, Captain Granville never lost a man nor had one of his crew seriously injured. At one time Captain Granville planned to desert the sailing ship and embark on a new steam vessel. The boat was not equipped in time, however, so he went back to his schooner and stuck with main sail and jib-boom ever afterward.

Other ships in which Captain Granville sailed were the Nemesis, the Heather Bell and the Ontario. The Ontario was lost in a November gale off Southampton, Ont. Captain Granville had been making his winter home at Southampton, and when the morning broke after the storm, the skipper found his boat had been driven on the rocks within a stone's throw of his own back yard. He had been within 1,000 feet of Southampton harbor without knowing it. The mainmast and masts had been carried away, and schooner and cargo had both to be abandoned. The following spring Captain Granville purchased the Hattie Hutt.

The appearance of the Hattie Hutt at Toledo a year ago created considerable comment. The schooner brought a cargo of lumber to that port, and was the first sailing vessel to enter the port of Toledo with a cargo in 12 years. The skipper went up town in the evening and found that films showing the arrival of the schooner were already being shown in the movie houses.

Captain Granville, in spite of his sixty-four years, is decidedly active, and mounts the masts and ladders like a youth of eighteen. He and his wife are sorry to lose their home of the last 15 years, but admit that the day of the schooner on the great lakes is done, and the career of the Hattie may as well be ended at once.

DEFENDS ETHICS OF STAGE

Archbishop Hayes Speaks Before New York Catholic Actors' Guild.

New York Times, April 24th. Theatrical stars of the first magnitude, play producers, play writers, play critics and art patrons vied with each other yesterday at the Hotel Astor in paying tribute to the Most Rev. Patrick J. Hayes, Archbishop of New York, who was the guest at a luncheon given by the Catholic Actors' Guild. There were 1,200 persons present. The luncheon began at 12.30, and was not over until nearly 5 o'clock.

To the left of Archbishop Hayes sat George W. Howard, first vice-president of the guild. On the right of the archbishop sat Ethel Barrymore. The luncheon did not begin until Archbishop Hayes arrived. His appearance was the signal for all to rise and applaud. No one present seemed to enjoy the occasion more than his Grace.

Mr. Howard presented as toast master, Brandon Tynan, formerly president of the guild. Mr. Tynan called some of the celebrities by name and they answered the roll call by rising and bowing as follows: Will Rogers, Irvin Cobb, Thomas Meighan, Gene Buck, William A. Brady, Eddy Dowling, Tom Lewis, Daniel Frohman, David Warfield, William Courtleigh, Max Reinhardt, Otto H. Kahn, A. O. Brown, who is Shepherd of the Lambs; Sam Forrest, Tom Wise, John Emerson, President of the Actors' Equity Association; the Rev. Martin E. Fahy, chaplain of the Guild; the Rev. Edward F. Leonard, pastor of St. Malachy's church; Miss Barrymore, Miss Elizabeth Murray, Miss Elizabeth Marbury, formerly the vice-president; Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, Mrs. Brandon Tynan, Mrs. Cornelius J. Gallagher, who was chairman of the luncheon committee, and Mrs. Jere J. Cohan, who was introduced as the mother of George M. Cohan.

Last of all Mr. Tynan called the name of Archbishop Hayes, the diners standing and applauding.

"The people of the stage have souls as much as other human beings, and they have beautiful souls," said his Grace.

"I have a shepherd's heart, a shepherd's prayer for each one of you. As archbishop I want to say that I have always found a generous response from the actors and actresses not only of the Catholic faith but of every other faith.

"Sometimes it is said that the stage has no ethics. I have never believed it. I have come into contact again and again with members of the theatrical profession who are just as spiritually minded as other groups in the land.

"You are always in the public eye. Therefore whatever you do receives notice, and is criticised by some. I have never done it. I hope I never shall. When I do there will be something the matter.

"The public is to be blamed for many of the abuses in our land rather than the people whom the public abuses. The stage must play its part and must feel its responsibility."

In thanking His Grace at the conclusion of his address, Mr. Tynan said that no one man had done more to make actresses and actors all over the world "live up to what they wanted to be" than the archbishop. There followed short speeches by Miss Marbury, Mr. Cobb, Mr. Emerson, Mr. Dowling, Mr. Rogers and Father Fahy. The luncheon closed with the benediction by Archbishop Hayes.

INTERESTING TRAVELLOGUE.

William Waldron Spoke on His Trip to European Countries.

At St. Luke's hall, on Friday evening, an interesting travelogue, with lantern slides, was given by William Waldron, Kingston, who has travelled very extensively throughout Europe. Mr. Waldron dealt with his subject in an able manner, describing the countries, the people, and their customs. His reminiscences and stories were most entertaining. An orchestra, under the leadership of A. W. Arbutick, rendered a choice musical programme. J. W. Connor supervised the lantern slides.

At the close, a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Waldron, on motion of Alfred Woodrow and George Coughlin, and conveyed to the speaker of the evening by Rev. J. de Pencier Wright, who expressed the pleasure of all present over the most interesting and illuminating address.

Laborers' Strike Settled.

The strike of laborers in the employment of Anglin-Norcross contractors for Queen's library, was settled early Saturday morning, the men going back to work at thirty-five cents an hour for nine hours. This information was given to the Whig by one of the men who was a leader in the negotiations. He said that the men were receiving thirty cents an hour and were working ten hours.
