"THE GREATEST MENACE"

Chief of Police Endorses Drug Evil Picture Coming to The Allen.

Nothing threatens to destroy a great portion of the younger generation of the country as does the terrible drug evil, and in the stamping out of the menace all factions are doing their utmost culminating in the concerted efforts of police, organization and motion picture industries to bring about a cleaner and better country. In the last category perhaps the greatest efforts yet put forth is in the wonderful picture "The Greatest Menace," a picture written by Angela C. Kaufman, and in itself a crusade to end the world's narcotic traffic.

Chief of Police Robinson of this city, in speaking of the drug habit, expressed himself as only too pleased to heartily endorse anything such as motion pictures which would tend to enlighten the public to the necessity of stamping out this great evil and spoke in glowing terms of the good which will be done by "The Greatest Menace." While Kingston may seem to be singularly fortunate in not having many drug addicts within her confines it is not because there is no danger of the traffic becoming prevalent here. From one end of the country to the other the drug evil has been increasing, and Chief Robinson deems it the paramount duty of every sane-thinking citizen to do his best towards lessening the evil, and one great way in which they may be educated to the harrowing distress which is wrought by the evil is to see "The Greatest Menace."

But it must not be thought that "The Greatest Menace" is a lecture or a sermon; on the contrary it is a powerful photo-drama, interspersed with splendid bits of true humor and comedy, but all the time sounding forth the great danger which is daily increasing in Canada. The little flower which has strangled the life of China is making such a steady growth in Canada and the United States that nothing but the whole-hearted and concerted efforts of everyone can stay its nefarious progress in the fair dominion. The picture comes to the Allen theatre both as an entertainment and an education, the various roles played by some of the most famous screen artists of the day. When it is considered that for the twelve months ending March 31, 1922, the Federal government alone prosecuted 23 doctors, 11 druggists, 4 veterinary surgeons, 165 drug dealers, and 634 Chinamen, making a total of 835 convictions, it will be seen that the traffic is indeed making terrible inroads on the social life of the country.

In a story which in no way offends, "The Greatest Menace" visualizes the evil effects of the drug and the manner in which the drug ring not only preys on those who are already enmeshed in its poisonous net, but is ever seeking to make new addicts to a habit which can only end in complete bodily and moral demoralization and is only terminated by death. "The Greatest Menace" is being shown at the Allen theatre next week and bears a powerful lesson with it that it will not fail to strongly appeal to every one, and leave a lasting impression on all those who see the picture.

BALDWIN'S MOTHER WAS NOTED WRITER

History of Four Remarkable British Sisters Who Married Men of Mark.

London, May 25.—"The four remarkable sisters" is a phrase that occurs again and again in memoirs of the family of Stanley Baldwin, the now premier. It concerns his mother and three other daughters of the late Rev. George B. Macdonald, a Methodist minister.

Alice married Lockwood Kipling, father of Rudyard Kipling; Agnes became the wife of Poynter, the painter; Georgiana became Lady Burne-Jones, and her beauty, it is stated, inspired her husband in painting that saintly type of woman known as the Burne-Jones woman; Louisa married Alfred Baldwin, the iron founder, who established the great firm of Baldwin's.

Alice, when her father was in the potteries, met Lockwood Kipling, a young designer of pottery. At Rudyard Lake, in Staffordshire, a holiday resort of the district, he proposed to her. When he received an offer of a post in India she went out there to marry him. In memory of the place of their meeting they christened their son Rudyard.

Mr. Baldwin's mother years ago had all the wonderful industry and talent of her father. He was a man of restricted means and she married an engineer and ironmaster, who was to become a millionaire. But she worked hard none the less, and made a name for herself as a writer.

Mrs. Kipling, Lady Poynter and Lady Burne-Jones are dead. Mrs. Baldwin has lived to see her son achieve the greatest political triumph that a commoner can attain.
