THE STATUETTE "PAX" PRESENTED TO R.M.C.

By French-Consul General— Ceremony in Sir Arthur Currie Hall.

The second annual "Soiree Francaise" given by the cadets of the Royal Military College was held in the Sir Arthur Currie Memorial hall on Saturday evening...

French Consul's Address. The French Consul-General, in making the presentation spoke as follows.

"My first word will be a word of gratitude for this kind and courteous reception. I know that it is not to my person that your greetings are intended. If someone is to be applauded as he is tonight, it is a personality higher than any individual, it is the country I have the honor to represent today among you, and I thank you, ladies and gentlemen, from the bottom of my heart for all that is meant, at this very time, by your applause and greetings.

"I am glad to be among you today. I am always glad to be among Canadians. Canada is a country which a Frenchman may be justly proud of, not only for all that old France has done here, and how could we forget those hardy French pioneers who came to Canada, fought their way all along the St. Lawrence river and this beautiful chain of Great Lakes to take their share of the white man's burden and through untold hardships and devotion to open this part of the world to civilization.

"If I were to forget it, you yourselves will remind me of that splendid inheritance and you will tell me that Kingston was at a time Fort Frontenac and that we may find many souvenirs of the same glorious history from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the mouth of the Mississippi river. "No! it is not only that glory of the past that gives me joy and pleasure to be in Canada. It is also because I find in this country, under the British flag, the most encouraging and helpful collaborations of two great races, living side by side and giving to each other the benefit of their own personal qualities. This is, a great and living fact.

"It is great, firstly because it happens here in America, in this new world, so important for humanity, but it is even greater because it reminds us of another experiment that has been going on for four years in France, on French soil. I mean to say the united effort of all the might of the British empire and of the republic of France to defeat a powerful and dangerous foe. This brotherly collaboration we cannot forget, and the less so because among all the armies that went to the rescue of civilization we keep a special place in our hearts and remembrance for the Canadian soldier.

"If I am here today, it is because of this fact. Friend and Brother. "It has been justly said that blood is thicker than water. But there is something thicker than the blood of a brother and it is the blood of a friend and brother who did not hesitate to give his life for us.

"France is a good judge of courage and it is France today who, through my humble voice, comes here to publicly acknowledge once more the glorious deeds of the Canadian armies. "And let me say that nothing could be more appealing to me than to be able to make that declaration here in Kingston at the Royal Military College of Canada, in the presence of General Sir Archibald Macdonell, commander of the college, and of General Sir Arthur Currie, the commander-in-chief of the Canadian forces. We Frenchmen admire and respect them both, and we see in them real friends of the Cordiale Entente in peace as in war.

"My General, the statuette which I have the honor to present tonight to you in the name of the French Republic is given to the college because we know what the college has done, because we know the kind of officers it sent to the field. We cannot forget that when the Canadians came to fight with us, to fight and to win with us, they had all the traditions, all the virtues, all the science of the Royal Military College behind them to encourage them, to support them and to lead them to victory and peace.

"So I am here to recognize publicly all that we owe to the cadets who fought and died with our brothers and sons who now lie in the fields of France.

"You may be sure that their memory will always be cherished and that the French mothers will never forget them as they cannot dissociate them from their own sons and heroes.

"And it is because France cannot dissociate in her memory the mothers from their glorious sons that it is the statue of "Peace" that is given to the college. War and all its heroism is justified only if it can lead to a sound and just peace. It is for that sort of peace that the French and Canadian mothers have suffered untold anguish and it is to keep peace with honor that institutions like the Royal Military College are founded and maintained.

"So, my General, here is the statue of Peace, and let me say, ladies and gentlemen, it is in good hands. The statuette, draped with the Tri-

Color of France, was then unveiled by the French representative.

General Macdonell's Reply. Major-General Sir Archibald Macdonell replied in behalf of all ranks of the Royal Military College, asking the Consul-General to convey to the government of France the sincere and grateful thanks of the college for the beautiful statuette, which standing at the head of the stairway, would be an inspiration to those entering the Currie Hall, to follow the steps of the men who had won this honor for their college, many of whom sleep beneath the soil of France. The men of the Canadian Corps who always found a welcome in the villages of France, will always wish success to their Allies—splendid and Victorious France.

"The Marseillaise" was then sung by the cadets and three hearty cheers given for the consul. The statuette is mounted on a pedestal made entirely of Pittsford Valley marble, and presents a very striking picture in its position in the hall at the entrance to the Currie hall. It stands four feet and a half high, and is mounted on a double base. On the top of the pedestal, is a French scroll, featuring the fleur-de-lis of the sunny land of France. The lettering is in French style, deep sunk with gold leaf. The pedestal was designed and erected by the McCallum Granite Company, of this city.

The concert was exceptionally noteworthy of praise, and was considered by many to be even better than the initial one staged last year. The various difficult roles were carried out in a clever manner and the sketches, songs and tableaux were all rendered in perfect style, and when it is remembered that the native language of France was used throughout, the versatile training of the R. M. C. cadet may well be imagined.

Opening with an overture by the college orchestra, the assembled chorus of over forty voices sang "O Canada" and the various numbers were roundly applauded. A delightful little comedy in one act was staged by Cadets Morton, Mickle and Norris, the plot being the early marriage trials of Roger and Colette, who have the fun of quarrelling and then making up in the time-worn fashion.

The foundation of Kingston in 1673 by the Count de Frontenac was portrayed by six picturesque tableaux, showing the landing of the flotilla, the erection of the fort, the trade and parleying with the Indians and the final departure, etc., the various acts having rare historic interest. The characters were as follows: Count Frontenac, Cadet Burley; missionary, Cadet Grier; soldiers, Cadets Lampman and Luke; colonists, Cadets McMurtry and Coyle; "Coureurs de bois," Cadets Monk and Taylor; Indian chief, Cadet Gilites; and Indians, Cadets Clark, Sutherland and Gordon.

Selections by Cadets, Larue and Watt, and a number of projections by Cadet Porteous, followed by the singing of La Marseillaise and the National Anthem brought the very enjoyable concert to a close.

Change Not Popular. According to the Winchester Press very much surprise and disappointment was occasioned in Methodist circles in that village when it was learned that in the final draft by the stationing committee of the Montreal Methodist conference, in session in Brookville, Rev. J. K. Curtis was drafted to go to Princess Street church, Kingston, and that Rev. J. A. Waddell, of the same city was to come to Winchester. During their four years residence in Winchester, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have made many friends, and under his pastorate the activities of all departments in the church have increased. A man of progressive and modern ideas, an able and forceful speaker and a citizen who takes an interest in all civic movements, Mr. Curtis will be missed in Winchester.
