JEWELLERS PRINCESS STREET

Popular imagination is demanding that some recognition be made of father's share in the burden of the work-a-day world. With no thought in the world of robbing mother of the cherished place she occupies in the hearts of every daughter and son in the broad universe, little children are beginning to ask, "Why isn't there a Daddy's Day?" A number of letters have appeared in the public press lately—some from little children, some from older children of the fairer sex who know that father had a place in laying the foundation and building the structure of the home—asking why there shouldn't be a "Father's Day" and suggesting that one day out of 365 be set aside for him.

And why shouldn't there be a Father's Day? Has he not endured the heat and burden of the day, too? Has he not been inspired by the same high motives as mother in giving his sons, his daughters a better chance in the world than he had? Has he not carried upon his shoulders heavy burdens of responsibility, endured anxieties, fought his way through difficulties, made innumerable sacrifices for those dependent upon him?

There is no one who realizes this better than mother, daughter and son. That is why popular imagination is demanding a Father's Day.
