THE ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE BALL

The June ball of 1923, held on Monday night, was the climax to an eventful day at the Royal Military College and was a most brilliant function.

As the guests entered the ballroom, they met an entrancing scene; flags of every nation, the cross-barred banners of Britain predominating, were strung over the heads of the dancers, rifles, snowshoes and lances were on the galleries, the arms of the college were at one end of the hall, and against the staff box, draped with a Union Jack, was a model of the Memorial Arch as it will be when completed.

The mess uniform of the staff and visiting officers, the scarlet tunics of the cadets and the flame, green, blue and silver and gold tulle frocks of the women and girls, under the changing light, was a beautiful sight indeed.

which the letters R.M.C. flashed in and out, were among the out-of-door attractions, and the grotto, with its blocks of ice, which colored lights glowed, the cool resting place for countless fragrant roses, was entered from the moonlit grounds.

What Editor Hears

That the plicated skirt may be supplemented today, if the style suits you, with a plicated blouse. Of crepe de chine in white or sand, the blouse is a triumph of pleating except for the plain and wide neck band and outside girdle.

The man who "told you so" has little to say when mistaken. A fashionable fool is one whom all sensible people try to avoid. Almost every community has its experts in being disagreeable.
