Our satisfactory results are due to our objectivity in applying the peace treaties, for we strive to keep the strictly economic character of the same while recovering reparations."

He had sent to Ottawa for copies of the amendment and expected that action would be taken within the next few days.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN

WRITTEN FOR THE WHIG BY ARTHUR HUNT CHUTE.

On Sept. 22nd, 1911, the day after Mr. Borden was elected premier, I rode with him from Wolfville to Grand Pre, Nova Scotia.

The car rolled on past the general store, then up a shady avenue, and stopped by a red farm house; a grey old lady, a fine little body, stood upon the doorstep to give the mother's welcome.

A few months later, in New York City, I happened to pass the Hotel Plaza, where that day the Canadian Ensign was flying.

"What's that for?" I enquired.

"Sir Robert Borden, the Prime Minister of Canada, is staying there," was the reply.

Still later, I saw a British warship, lying in Halifax harbor. Pointing to it a friend remarked, "She just came in to take Sir Robert over to his place in the Imperial War Cabinet."

"Going some for the Grand Pre schoolboy," I muttered to myself.

A great chapter, in the history of Canada, is the chapter on Robert Borden, because his career synchronises with the period of Canada's coming of age.

It was most fitting that he, Canada's war premier, the one British premier there in 1914, still there in 1918, should declare: "As at the beginning Canada did not hesitate, so in the end she will not falter."

Recently, I visited Sir Robert in his quiet study, at Ottawa, where the pictures of Lloyd George and Sir Wilfrid Laurier look down upon high shelves of books, in an atmosphere of scholastic calm.

We've had hoists of books since the war; like Col. Repington's, and Margot Asquith's, "Gossips," like Philip Gibbs' "Now It Can Be Told."

Sir Robert's work will not be listed with those of lighter vein. But the deeper student will find him a permanent contributor, whose history will remain upon the bookshelf, when "gossips" and "sob sisters" are forgotten.

Apart from the old world records, there will be a distinctive interest in his story, because it will reveal against the background of old world hate, the splendid picture of new world devotion, the picture of one of the younger daughters, through imperial sacrifice, attaining to the dignity of nationhood.

What vast, far-reaching changes in imperial control were precipitated by the war!

Sir Robert, during his tenure of office, saw what had once been a brood of cubs becoming a group of full-grown lions.

Replying to those who plead against the full-grown status, Sir Robert says: "I am one of those that believe that the essential unity of the Commonwealth has in no sense been diminished by its development into an organization which is virtually a Britanic League of Nations."

"Vast indeed are the problems that lie before us in maintaining and perpetuating this union in a family full-grown." Perhaps, addressing himself to these problems, Robert Borden in his quiet study may even yet be able to make a decisive contribution in that realm of thought which lies behind the realm of action.

Having an eye to future eventualities, Sir Robert says: "The failure of the Dominions to accept and support a policy of vital concern would seriously affect the Commonwealth's influence and prestige. It is essential as much for Great Britain as for her sister nations that the voice of the whole Commonwealth shall speak; it is mightier than the voice of the United Kingdom alone."

"With increasing voice and influence in external relations the Dominions must necessarily accept and realize their wider responsibilities. It is impossible for them to assert a national status unless they are prepared to assume corresponding national obligations for the Commonwealth's safety. It cannot be doubted that within the British League of Nations their security is far greater, and their responsibilities in this respect much less burdensome, than if they should withdraw."

My parting impression as I left Sir Robert was not of the wooden person of the partisan cartoonist; it was of a type of Canadian, evolved on patrician rather than on plebeian lines, an urbane gentleman, intensely alive to all the spot and play of life, enriched in mind, mellowed in judgement, kindly and tolerant in feeling.

ARE PLACED UNDER ARREST

Heads of United Mine Workers Taken in Custody.

CHARGED WITH PUBLISHING

False Tales That Might Cause Injury to the Public Interest.

Sydney, N.S., July 6.—Dan Livingstone, president, and James B. McLachlan, secretary of the United Mine Workers of America, district 28, were arrested at strike headquarters, Glace Bay, last night following receipt of the following telegram from Hon. W. J. Oharn, attorney-general of Nova Scotia:

"J. B. McCormick, chief of police, Sydney, Warrants have been issued by M. B. Archibald, magistrate for the city of Halifax, charging James B. McLachlan and Daniel Livingstone, with unlawfully publishing false tales whereby injury or mischief was likely to be occasioned to the public interest, namely the government and provincial police of Nova Scotia, contrary to section 138 of the code. Please arrest immediately if possible and writ. Chief Inspector Kennedy will arrive in the morning with warrants. Seek co-operation of provincial police if necessary."

Secretary McLachlan told the Canadian Press last evening that the letter attacking the provincial police and published over his signature had been sent to all locals within his jurisdiction.

The commissioner of provincial police stated that he was not prepared to ensure protection in the event of the company deciding to relieve the officials at present operating the pumps and fans. The fact that the company has yet made no attempt to relieve those men, in face of statements by workers that they would only permit company officials to enter the mines, is taken to mean that the company is endeavoring to guard against precipitation of trouble pending anticipated action on the part of John L. Lewis, international president of the United Mine Workers of America.

CHURCH OBSERVES 125TH BIRTHDAY

The Baptists at Wicklow Celebrate Anniversary of First Service.

Cobourg, July 7.—One of the most unique events in the history of the Church life of Canada took place at Wicklow, ten miles east of here, when the congregation of the Baptist Church celebrated the 125th anniversary of its existence.

The history of the first Baptist congregation in that locality dates back to 1785, when Reuben Crandall, a youth of eighteen years, came to Canada as a licensed Baptist preacher from a place called the Nine Partners, New York State. He came on foot, and crossed the St. Lawrence river near Prescott. Travelling westward, he found settlers in Prince Edward county, in whose homes he held services. Coming on farther west, he reached Crumme and Haldimand townships, where he made a stand, and organized a congregation.

In 1789 the Haldimand Baptist Church was organized. As early as 1800 the small house would not accommodate the congregation, and later a larger building was erected, which for several years was the only church building in the township of Haldimand. In 1817 it was able to claim the entire time and services of a regular pastor.

CANADIAN SALMON BEING DRIVEN OUT

Cheap Japanese Article Sold Under Same Label—Discrimination in Hops.

London, July 7.—Japanese canners, alleged to have the backing of the Soviet government, are driving Canadian salmon from the British market by selling a cheaper article under the same label. At today's annual meeting of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce the British government was urged to require Siberian salmon to be stamped as such so that the British buyer would have an opportunity to exercise his preference for Empire goods. Any other resolution urged the government to cease discriminating against Canadian hops. Although the government agreed that Canadian hops were to be given preference over foreign hops, the control, which is said to be influenced by English hop growers, has managed in the administration of the agreement to defeat its purpose, and is alleged to have discriminated against Canadian hops, not only in favor of British, but even of foreign hops.

GOLF AND CORSETS ARE URGED FOR MEN

The First Named is Applied Osteopathy—Don't Let Business Interfere.

New York, July 7.—American men, though they are naturally of good physique, neglect themselves too much, is the opinion of Dr. F. P. Millard, Toronto, who advocated golf and corsets as the great correctives for "stoutness and creaky joints." In a speech yesterday at the convention of the American Osteopathy Association, he said, "drop business." I notice with pleasure that a good many of the doctors who came to this conference are absent this morning, having left for the links. Golf applied osteopathy. The swinging club limbers the spine and the wrists. Dropping business for golf now and then is a good way to make business grow.

Speaking of corsets, the doctor said men were much more susceptible to rupture and abdominal sagging than women, and that absolutely the only cure for the fat man was a good strong set of stays.

Dr. M. F. Church, of Calgary, Alta., speaking on the subject of foot treatment, said that osteopathic manipulation of the foot combined with the use of proper shoes, will usually give the patient his health back again.
