250TH ANNIVERSARY OF KINGSTON.

Story of the Journey of Frontenac and La Salle in 1673, as Told by Miss A. M. Machar.

The Holding of Fort Frontenac
As Count Frontenac surrounded by the officers of his guard, retraced his former course down the great river of Hochelaga, with much greater ease of mind and body than his journey up the river had permitted him, he could not but feel good reason for thankfulness to God, in the remarkable success which had, in so short a period, crowned his public-spirited enterprise with such complete and remarkable success. He had made the long and arduous journey in safety, carried out his plans, not only for the confirmation of peace with a long-dreaded enemy, but also for the erection of a fortress much needed, as he believed, for the security and prosperity of the people he governed, as well as for the honour of France. And he had travelled these long leagues of distance and passed through perils seen and unseen, without the loss of a single canoe, or harm to any of his men—or to the "children" of his vice-royalty, whose good he doubtless sincerely desired. For Frontenac, though bearing a reputation for haughtiness, carried a true, human heart under his vice-regal trappings, a heart that beat in a brotherly sympathy for the poor untutored denizens of the wilderness, so exposed to imposition and deception, yet so responsive, as he had found them—to the note of real kindness and generous treatment, which had won them for the time at least, to take in the duties of human brotherhood.

He had gained from the Iroquois the concessions he had sought, and wrote to Colbert that "he might boast of having impressed them at once with respect, fear and good will," and that by means of the new fort, with a vessel already begun, and another fort which he hoped to build at the mouth of the Niagara, the French would command the Upper Lakes, always an essential point for the mastery of Canada. And all this work had been done in so short a time, and without loss of life or property, and owing to the aid he had enlisted from his friends at a cost of about ten thousand lires advanced by himself on behalf of the King.

And however opinions might differ as to the commercial value of the new "fur depots with defences," as it was modestly styled by its friends, and however much the keen-eyed merchants of Montreal might object to it from their point of view, there could be no doubt that in it New France would possess an effective barrier against Iroquois invasions for years to come.

La Salle Foreсталled.
It was now, at any rate, an accomplished fact and not withstanding the uncertainty in Frontenac's mind, whether its building would prove itself acceptable to his royal master, even the Montreal merchants became reconciled to it when they found that the following summer brought a largely increased number of Iroquois down the St. Lawrence, to dispose of their furs.

It had so happened that on the day on which Frontenac's second council was so amicably held, Pere Marquette and Louis Joliet, had arrived at Quebec with the news, long expected by La Salle, that they had forestalled him in his long and laborious search for the mysterious Mississippi, which he had been seeking so long! In one sense this could not but be a disappointment to his long cherished hopes of being its discoverer. But he was not such an egoist as to let this personal disappointment deter him from a vigorous following up of the important fact, and in order to carry out the far-reaching projects that filled his imagination, such a base as Fort Frontenac, "the new depot with defences" could supply, was absolutely essential. For the task he had thus set himself, La Salle seemed exceptionally fitted. Brave, chivalrous, enthusiastic, persistent, endowed with indomitable resolutions and inexhaustible endurance, with a strong constitution, mental and physical, it had become his ruling passion to explore the great unknown regions of the vast continent, taking possession of them, after the manner of explorers, in the name of the King of France. His early wanderings to north and west had forced him to give up his original hope of finding a water-way to the west in that direction, and by degrees he concentrated his plans on the great unexplored Mississippi; of whose rich and fertile lands he had learned so much from his own observation and from the reports of wandering Indians. To settle the point as to which he was still uncertain whether the great river flowed into the Gulf of Mexico or that of California, by colonising its banks, to establish the rule of France along its course was now the purpose to which all his energies were to be applied, and all minor success subordinated.

Funds Were Advanced.
In order to promote these projects, he sailed for France in the autumn of 1674, with a strong recommendation from Frontenac, and plans too extensive to be mastered by a king pre-occupied with his ambitious schemes in Europe, to be much concerned about the acquisition of lands in an unknown and wild continent three thousand miles away. But Frontenac's recommendations secured him a good reception at Court, a patent of nobility in consideration of his past services as an explorer, and a grant of the command of Fort Frontenac and its adjacent land, to be constituted into a seigniorship with himself as the seignior, on condition that he should repay the sum expended on the fort, rebuild it in stone, and maintain a garrison sufficient for defence and the improving of the land. The sums necessary for the fulfilment of these conditions were readily advanced by his relatives and friends in Paris, including the worthy merchant of the Rue S. Martin, his cousin Francois Piet, who had been one of the first confidants of his ambitious plans, previous to his first voyage to the New World in 1666. (To Be Continued.)

GANANOQUE

July 11.—Mrs. D. A. Leslie and Mrs. C. A. Church, Syracuse, N.Y., are the guests of Mrs. J. Heffernan for a few days.

The many friends of Mrs. Robert McArthur were distressed to hear that she had fallen down stairs, early yesterday morning, and suffered a very bad break in her leg. Just a couple of years ago Mrs. McArthur fell and broke her hip. It is the same side that is affected in this instance and so serious was the break that it required four hours service of two doctors in setting it.

The Canadian Club dinner at the Inn, on Tuesday evening, was a most interesting and enjoyable affair. About forty were present including some of our summer visitors from Syracuse, Baltimore, Washington, Toronto and New York. Very eloquent addresses were given by Dr. S. W. Dyde, principal of Queen's Theological College, Kingston, and Professor L. A. Chambers, principal of Women's College, Constantine. Rev. Mr. Kidd introduced Dr. Dyde and T. I. Ellis, Professor Chambers. Clifford Sine moved a vote of thanks to the distinguished speakers, while Dean Kehoe seconded the same. W. J. Wilson, president of the club was in the chair. The dinner was of the usual high standard of excellence.

Mrs. Watson and little daughter, Detroit, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Madie, at their summer home, "Kitsyemenie."

Messrs McDonald and Tressler, Durant Motors of Canada, Toronto, were in town to-day. H. W. Maxson, Montreal was in town to-day.

Robert Kelly, Ottawa, has purchased the Thousand Islands bakery business from George Gibson.

The Y.P.A. of the Anglican church is holding a picnic at McNinch's Beach this afternoon.

William Toner, who has been in the General Hospital, Kingston, for some time has returned home, though it is understood not much improved in health.

Miss Marie Free, Rochester, N.Y., who has been the guest of Mrs. James Sophie, Princess street, for the past couple of weeks has returned home after a very pleasant visit here.

Mrs. Hugh McFadden, who has been visiting friends in Watertown, N.Y., has returned home.

Miss Marie Ralph, Lansdowne, is the guest of Miss Mary LaQue for a few days.

Patrick Corrigan, Kingston, is in town for a few days.

Miss Fannie Zivian, who has been teaching in Ottawa, is home for the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Shortall motored up from Montreal and will spend their vacation with L. P. Shortall here, and Michael Shortall, Brewer's Mills.

Miss Rita Bishop was visiting friends in Kingston yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Timmins and daughter, Quebec City, motored up and are the guests of Mrs. James Soles.

Mrs. Pelow and son O'Gorman, who have been the guests of Mrs. Ford Petch, for the past week, returned to Rome, N.Y., yesterday.

TOBACCO'S EFFECT TESTED.

Medical Men Find That Smoking Aid's Digestion.

That smoking may be regarded as an aid to digestion was indicated by Dr. J. W. Crane in an address delivered recently to a Western University audience at London, Ont. Dr. Crane said that he had at one time advised his students not to use tobacco, believing it weakened digestion, but tests had shown that the saliva of a smoker digested starch better than that of a non-smoker. Starch is a constituent of many foods. From another point of view Sir James Cantlie, the renowned British medical authority, also regards tobacco as an aid to digestion. "Tobacco," says Sir James, "has its good effects in digestion, in lessening the effects of worry."

U. S. SUFFER LOSS BY TARIFF ON CATTLE

200,000 Head a Year Being Diverted to Great Britain.

Washington, July 10. — Canada's surplus of about 200,000 head of cattle a year is being diverted from the United States to Great Britain because of the present American tariff of two cents a pound, it is said in a statement issued by the American Farm Bureau Federation, whose Economics department reports that there is practically no benefit to the cattle industry of the United States from the new tariff and a distinct injury to United States cattle feeders.

The federation declared that in co-operation with other organizations it had appealed to the tariff commission for relief, but that no action had been taken.

ALL FOR KINGSTON.

As the Eastern Terminal of New Welland Ship Canal.

The Montreal Gazette says: Kingston was unanimously favored as the terminal point of the new Welland ship canal at the meeting of the Canadian Marine Association executive and a wire to this effect was despatched to the deputy minister of public works in Ottawa.

The other two places at various times mentioned as the likely terminus of the canal, which is scheduled for completion in 1927, were Brockville and Prescott, but owing to the fact that to reach them the so-called tortuous channels of the Thousand Islands would have to be navigated, Kingston was the choice of the meeting after but little discussion, which was entirely in its favor.

A formidable point in favor of Kingston was the statement that the government has already made tentative plans for making Kingston the terminus of the canal, which involves expenditure of between seventy-five and a hundred million dollars to furnish passage for the large lake vessels.

There is only one way of seeing things rightly, and that is, seeing the whole of them.

tives, but that ultimately there would be no question of the boundary. God made, namely, the four seas of Ireland, and he emphasized that they would have to take most effective steps to bring about the unity so much desired. At Clonmel, Agriculture Minister Hogan said that the next step after the land bill would be towards securing the unity of Ireland.

"If you return us at the next election," he added, "we will give you this undertaking that the first and most important plank in our platform will be that form of republicanism which consists in keeping the majority will of the people inviolate and secure from all its enemies, inside or outside the state."

Fitzpatrick to Retire.

Quebec, July 11.—From a reliable source it is learned that the Federal government has already been advised that Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Lieutenant-governor of this province, will not accept a second term in that capacity. Further information was to the effect that his honor, whose term ends on October 31st, 1923, will officially tender his resignation in the first week of October, and will not even open the next session, which is scheduled for the 23rd of that month.
